Len isn't interested in being a radio amateur.

Len could have gotten a Technician 15+ years ago, but never did.

Who said you promised anything, Len? Or said it was improper?

All you did, way back on January 19, 2000, was to write that you were going to get an extra license "right out of the box", But here it is almost seven years later, and you haven't.

Seems to me that you write all sorts of stuff here but don't take any responsibility for it.

Len, you consider any disagreement with your views, or disproof of your claims,
as a direct insult.

Throw-away comment?

Let's allow the reader to decide:

Sure doesn't look like a throw-away comment.

I don't think so. You'd have to pass all the current license elements - including Element 1.

Promised?

Or simply stated your intention?

Seems to me you are saying that we should not believe your words.

If your statement was out of context, please explain how the context could mean anything different than a statement that you were going for an amateur Extra license.

That's nice, Len. So why are you so interested in changing amateur radio regulations if you don't want a license?

Judging by your inaction, Len, I'd say you don't want one.

Then you could not get an Amateur Extra class license now. You'll have to wait until the rules change.

Yet you tell us all about yourself here, Len. Your Commercial licenses and RA-number and much more. Seems like you only dislike titles you don't have.

Yet you mention them here - even though she earned them, not you.

Len, when it comes to egos, yours is most obvious here.

How so?

Sounds to me like you're saying you want radio amateurs to stop using Morse Code, not just testing for it.

Seems to me like you stoke it by telling us over and over again
about yourself and your accomplishments, Len.

If you were really secure, you wouldn't have to put others down by making fun of their names, ethnicity, education,
job/military/govt. service experience, gender, etc.

But you do all those things and more. That tells me you are really not secure, and are threatened by anyone who disagrees with you.

Then don't get one, Len.

But why not let those who do such things alone?

What is wrong with live and let live?

Yet we haven't seen a single example of such. No website, no magazine articles, no pictures, no results.

Some of us (such as myself) have built complete amateur radio stations and used them on the air to contact many others. Could you do that, Len? I think not.

IOW, you'd rather insult what others have done than do something yourself.

And a lot more. Like the addition of a minimum age requirement for a US amateur license, even though no such requirement has ever existed.

The big question is why Len is so interested in changing the rules of amateur radio,
when he's not involved with amateur radio in any other way.

Perhaps it just bothers him that someone is having fun?

Now I'd say that must be a trick question, as certainly, on the surface,
it appears only a moron would ask such a thing!

I'd say Len would do little or nothing to hinder anyone from having "fun." Now, for instance, say they were hogging up all the radio freqs for a good 'ole boys club, he'd be a pissed as hell--and rightly so!

That is all you are seeing. Len don't give a chit about children having fun ...

Yes. Pretty obvious, huh? Makes you wonder why some find it so hard to get that little point--suppose we are just gifted? Maybe we escaped the "dumbing down" of ham radio. I knew that incessant habit of banging that key for hours on end would do some type of damage--now in looking back, who would have supposed it would have done that much brain damage?
Ya' think the surgeon general should make 'em put a warning on side of the box the key comes in?

Because...I just have to know. Besides, this is alt.homosexual.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA - San Diego Zoo officials said they can't explain how an 800-pound gorilla with shaved legs escaped from his enclosure, injuring four people before he was shot to death. Police evacuated an estimated 300 people from the zoo compound Thursday and killed Magilla Gorilla, a 13-year-old male western lowland gorilla, after he charged at officers. Zoo workers armed with tranquilizer guns had pursued the animal through the forested jungles of the Wilds of Africa exhibit for about 40 minutes, but could not gain a clear shot, officials said. "He tried to charge two of our officers, so we had to shoot it," Deputy Police Chief Richard Beater said. "You can imagine the pandemonium we had out here when he got loose. We felt terrible we had to put this animal down." The injured included a mother and her toddler son. Davey Crockett, 3, was in fair condition at San Diego General Hospital with multiple bites to his head and chest. His mother, Tammy Faye Baker, 26, who was bitten on the legs, and Paris Hilton, who suffered arm injuries, were treated at hospitals and released. "I was like, this is not happening, this is so unreal, cause he just came out of nowhere," Tammy Faye said Friday on NBC's Today show. "I'm watching this gorilla. He has my son in his mouth, he's attacking little Davey, and I tried to help him and there wasn't really anything that I could do. He slings me back across the concrete area where we are. So it was really scary." Magilla Gorilla was in the award-winning gorilla-conservation area where he had access to computers that he used to write messages to antagonize rec.bicycles.racing newsgroup readers. Before the attack some youths (i.e., Carl Sundquist, et. al.) had reportedly teased Magilla shortly before the incident.

Anyone who takes up a hobby because it is "fashionable" to do so will not cause an enduring growth in amateur radio. It is not an issue of what I want. It is called facing reality. Fashions come and go. To insure the long term health of ham radio, we need a sustainable growth pattern not erratic blips due to people taking it up because it is in vogue.

Really, I've met just as many idiots in the technical fields as outside of it. The biggest difference is that those with the degree or working on the degree seem to feel that means they automatically have a higher IQ. That just isn't so.

I've never killfiled anyone over being politically incorrect. I happen to enjoy a spirited debate so long as it does not descend to name calling and snide remarks. I don't do it myself and won't tolerate those who do for very long. That is precisely why I have kill filed Morgan and Anderson. Neither one is able to continue a discussion without stooping to such tactics. Once name calling and snide remarks enter the discussion it is both boring and pointless to continue. I make every effort to avoid being sucked into such an exchange.

I've not had a reason to kill file you yet and hopefully never will have a reason. That we disagree in our points of view makes for stimulating discussions. It would be rather boring if everyone agreed all the time don't you think?

As previously stated, I want everyone to pay attention. A pool does that. I do not pretend that anyone can really predict it either. I have clearly labelled them as guesses. It would be wonderful if the optomists are right.

It's amazing to me that people refer to me as a morseperson. Not even half my contacts happen to be morse. In addition, I hate the "politically correct" suffix of "-person" in any application. As my father used to say, it is putting the em-PHA-sis on the wrong syl-LA-ble. The suffix "-man" simply carries the older meaning of human being. Personally I think we should go back to the term "werman" which was the term for the males just like "woman" was the term for the females. Somehow the prefix on "werman" was dropped.

Looking back at my own life, I've never cared whether I was "politically correct" or not. I have always had my own goals and worked toward them. I did not let me direct me towards what they thought I should do or like.

Well now you see Len's tactics of insulting and denigrating anyone who disagrees with him rather than debating the subject. I've never said that I know what is best for amateur radio. However like everyone here (including Anderson), I'm entitled to express my opinion and have a right to ignore those who are incapable of debating without stooping to insults, name calling, denigration, etc.

I've had many pleasant exchanges with Kim (W5TIT) even though we disagree on almost everything. Alun (N3KIP) and I also disagree on many issues yet our debates are very enjoyable.

These are the numbers of current, unexpired amateur radio licenses held by individuals on the stated dates, and the percentage of the total number of active licenses that class contains:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice - 49,329 (7.3%)
Technician - 205,394 (30.4%)
Technician Plus - 128,860 (19.1%)
General - 112,677 (16.7%)
Advanced - 99,782 (14.8%)
Extra - 78,750 (11.7%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254 (49.5%)

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 291,209 (43.2%)

Total all classes - 674,792

As of December 31, 2006:

Novice - 23,632 (3.6%) [decrease of 25,697]
Technician - 290,126 (44.2%) [increase of 84,882]
Technician Plus - 32,886 (5.0%) [decrease of 95,974]
General - 131,216 (20.0%) [increase of 18,539]
Advanced - 69,914 (10.7%) [decrease of 29,868]
Extra - 108,219 (16.5%) [increase of 29,469]

(percentages may not add up to exactly 100.0% due to rounding)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 323,012 (49.2%) [decrease of 11,242]

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 309,349 (47.2%) [increase of 18,140]

Total all classes - 655,993 (decrease of 18,799)

Note that these totals do not include licenses
that have expired but are in the grace period.

They also do not include club, military or other station-only licenses.

Note also that effective April 15, 2000, new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced licenses are no longer issued.

Since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician. By May of 2010, the number of Technician Plus licenses will drop to zero, because all of them will have been renewed as Technician or allowed to expire. It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

I must admit he could be annoyed at a load of Morse code operators monopolising a chunk of phone spectrum. I always was too, but only because I wanted to use that spectrum. He apparently doesn't want to use it, which is a little harder to understand.

BTW, Len, I have an EE degree and used to work in an EMC lab (EMC being what most people call radio interference, approximately speaking). Some people hear that and jump to the conclusion that I was in ham radio enforcement, which makes me laugh, because I never was. I could just add that I moved into the law, but the same people would probably think that I was prosecuting interference cases (!) whereas in fact I am a patent agent.

My point is that many hams are (or were) radio professionals, but not all of us drop references to our professional experience when we are talking in a group of hams, except where it's actually relevant to the discussion. I have met a few people who claim they could never be hams because they have professional experience in radio, but I have never understood that point of view.

Get a licence and try 'slumming' on the ham bands, Len. You won't be the only one, you know!

Very well put, Alun. I oft wonder whether Len, with his condescending attitude, considers or takes into mind that there are many of us in these groups that are fairly well educated.
Len quite obviously views himself as being a self-appointed, master "wordsmith" and finds a great amount of smug pleasure jousting with licensed Amateurs.
I once saw it written that Mister Len was a Master of Flatus. It was an accurate descriptor. To date I've seen nothing to rebut that description.

Well said, Dee. Like you, I've met many men and women whose IQ and learning abilities often far surpass those of the 2.0 grade average college grad who had to cheat on finals simply to get a "D" average.

There are a number of possible reasons why you cannot find such a post.
The falsehood that you've set forth, is not among them.

I have never deleted the Google archive of any post I've made. Perhaps you should examine the possibility that your memory is faulty. Do you find a Google archive where you've made a claim that I said something like that? Maybe that's what you remember.

Your thoughts seem to be straying all over the place, Brian.

So you have French radio amateurs breaking French regulations, not a case of a Tanzanian radio amateur breaking Tanzanian regs. You've brought the matter up time and time again, in an attempt to accuse me of wrongdoing. It never stuck because it was never true. Yet here you are again.

I'm of the opinion that attending a social event where Len was present would virtually guarantee an absence of fun. He has a gift.

Len isn't involved in the use of amateur radio frequencies. How is it his right to be upset? Len isn't a licensed radio amateur.

That's incorrect, "John". Len has told us that he has a problem with children participating in what he sees as an adult activity.

The figures are derived directly from the FCC database. They're not counted by hand,
eliminating that source of error.

The number who have died or who are completely inactive and will not return to amateur radio is completely unknown. Those folks will disappear by attrition, which can take up to 10 years.

My purpose in posting these numbers for the past several years is to have a record of the changes in US amateur license numbers that always uses the same method of counting, and is not dependent on anything but preservation of Usenet archives.

Happy New Year!

Why can't you share, Woger? After all, you won "Cocksucker of the Year" for the second time in a row. You should share the limelight instead of being jealous.

You should really get to know Todd Daugherty, N9OGL, who came from behind to win "Pedophile of the Year" for 2007. He's your kind of guy (and he even writes like you, but in a kind of Tonto style.) The two of you need to give acceptance speeches, but I know that you won't. You just don't have any gratitude for the nice things that people do for you.

Mark Morgan was going to throw a party for the two of you, but he got disgusted and canceled it. All you have left now is Bill White. He still wants to thank you for all of the late night crank calls.

You're too fucking stupid to understand that the people who were helping you aka NewsGuy continually fucks you behind your back, dipshit.

How loud do you think Child Molesting Holsten will scream when the first Ass Rape takes place, you sick fat fuck? I'm sure Bill White knows that it's really you who is prank calling him, fatty. I've helped make the Pedo's hero Hal's life a living fucking hell. He was the smart one, he ran away like a little bitch. Steve the Pedo has just started to suffer. Remember to tell the stupid fat fuck who called DirecTV about him working. Now they can garnish his SSI check, fatty. Oh and ask him how his neighbors like him now that they have detailed information about him and "the young shaved ones" as well as Chris's arrest. I'm just thinking how terrible it would be if one of them shot him. The only good child molester is a dead one... And the only good Pedo enabler.

Alun,

You have to understand... Lennie doesn't WANT to get a ham license. He has pretty much been posting the same drivel to this newsgroup for a decade. I refer you to the following posting I made 7 years ago on this very topic:

Actually Jim, the above quote summarizes Lennie's problem in a nutshell. It pisses him off to no end that 4-year olds are able to get ham radio licenses, and he, well, can't (or won't).

Lennie's vitrol is sometimes amusing, most of the time boring. A cursory review of DejaNews will show that Lennie has never had a kind word for amateurs, or the amateur radio service.

Almost 2 decades ago when I was in my teens, we had a grandmother living with us. She used to constantly bitch, moan, and complain. She was a lonely, bitter old woman whose time had passed by, and her goal in life was to make everyone else equally as miserable as her. She couldn't be happy, then by golly neither would anyone else.

That's pretty much the Lennie Anderson of today. As a CB Radio operator, for decades he has been on the outside of ham radio looking in. That nasty code test has been 'holding him back'. And, by golly, if HE can't be a ham operator, and be worshiped by the masses (the intellectual giant he is), well, then nobody should be able to enjoy ham radio.

That's pretty much my mental image of Lennie. A senile old fart, rocking in his corner rocking chair, who occasionally wipes the drool of his face, plugs in his telephone to his 300 baud acoustic-coupler modem, and uses his VT100 green-screen to spread hate and discontent.

So, as you see Alun, nothing has changed over the past 7 years, except the email address he uses when he posts.

Ah yes, instead of the Turkish proxy at 195.175.37.8 that you used to make this post, you attacked Hal's web site from 195.175.37.6, as recorded in the list of IP addresses published at his blogspot site.

You have just used your real name and associated it with the same subnet as the attacking machine.

That makes you one really stooooooopid s.o.b.

Mailing the neighbors as well as making crank calls? You had a really "special" holiday, didn't you? Could it be that 2007 will be the year in which your chickens finally come home to roost? Let's hope so. You richly deserve it.

This is getting interesting. If "A" states something that you believe

Well, actually he does - and not in a positive way.

There's never been a minimum age requirement for a US amateur radio license.

Len thinks there should be such a requirement. He thinks no one under the age of 14 years should be able to get any class of US amateur license, regardless of their ability to pass the license tests.

That's not just from his postings here - he put such a proposal into one of his official comments to FCC.

When asked what problems were caused by lack of such a requirement, he could not name a single case where the youth of a licensed radio amateur caused an enforcement problem. (In fact, many of the worst violators of Part 97 are about Len's age....;-))

Every so often, there's a mention of some youngster who earned an amateur radio license at a very early age. One such news item caused Len to claim here that there must have been some kind of fraud at the VE session, because he somehow knew that the youngsters pictured could not have passed the license tests honestly.

Looks like Len doesn't want anyone under 14 years of age to experience the fun of amateur radio, regardless of what other qualifications they have, tests passed, etc.

There is some concern I have mulled over in my mind, about youngsters getting a ticket too young. Until fairly recently, I thought it would be great ...

However, having seen quite a few individuals who might be of a "pedo nature", now not only do I have a concern about youngsters with internet access but also with a ham ticket!

Good one Dave. When you start "studying" for your general you will see how dumbed down and simple it is and you might marvel at why the QPC would have ever even bothered to commit such a "test" to publication. It may also occur to you that, as the the Geico commercial says, it is so easy a caveman could do it. Actually I would move back perhaps 25 million years earlier in the evolutionary cycle and say it is so easy, even a monkey could do it.

And monkeys it will be.

What do you wonder about?

They are simply the number of licenses in the FCC database.

Of course a certain percentage of amateurs shown in the database are dead, but their families have not notified FCC of the fact, and their licenses will stay in the database and in the license counts until they expire.

And a certain percentage are held by amateurs with health problems such that they will never again be on the air, yet again their licenses will stay in the database for years.

And a certain percentage are held by amateurs who, for a variety of reasons,
have lost interest such that they will never again be on the air, yet again their licenses
will stay in the database for years.

In the latter two examples, the licensee may renew the license even though they don't use it. All it takes is a few clicks on the FCC website, or the proper form, envelope and stamp. A well-meaning friend or family member could do all the paperwork and simply get the licensee to sign or OK the renewal, and there's another decade for one license.

So there's an unknown percentage of licenses in those numbers that are temporarily or permanently inactive, yet they're still counted.

A couple of decades ago, back when the license term was five years, it was required that the licensee certify that they'd actually used their amateur license a certain amount, and could still pass the license tests. All that is long gone.

Tell me, what do you as being so difficult about amateur radio that would make the test difficult, perhaps I am missing something? What relevant and complex details are missing from the exams?

It may just have to do with the abundance of technical materials where were available to me in my past. Or, perhaps it was my interest in all things technical--but there didn't seem to be that type of mystery, magic or difficulty involved in electronics or radio ...

Actually youngsters and their parents need to be concerned about every person the youngster comes in contact with. Look at the news reports of teachers who have taken advantage of young people. Keeping youngsters out of an activity because they might run into a pedophile basically means keeping them locked up at home. That just isn't going to work.

Well, let me give you an example which I am familiar with:

Take the unemployment figures. Here in california, in past decades (pre 1975?), the numbers of unemployed were based on those who were looking for work, if you registered as being such--you were counted on the unemployment roles. Today it is much different.

Today, the unemployment roles ONLY list those who are DRAWING unemployment. Somehow, these figures are even manipulated to keep the unemployment rate hovering at, or around, 5%, or 1 in 20.

However, if you take into account all who are looking for work AND those drawing unemployment, that figure becomes closer to 1 in 5.

I came into knowledge of these figures when I was creating software utilities to monitor these statistics. The avg. guy in the general public just sees the 5% figure on the news and thinks it is real ...

I am highly suspicious that those amateur statistics may be manipulated in much the same way--although I have no figures here to the contrary of what is listed or even why such manipulations would be done ... I just have a naturally suspicious nature ... been burnt by my gov't one to many times.

I think that may very well be the case. I've had occasion to teach ham radio classes to people who have had little or no math beyond basic arithmetic. I've taught people who have no technical background or exposure to electronics or radio. If all you ever had was a general science class, the ionosphere is a big mystery and so on. There are lots of hams from all backgrounds and callings. Our club includes members who are truck drivers, housewives, nurses, waiters, construction workers, etc. as well as electronic technicians. Maybe you should do as you have said to me: You need to get out more < teasing and tongue in cheek>.

Yes Dee, a proper balance is difficult to achieve. Being the product of a two parent family, where one parent was always at home to supervise my activities and assist in providing for my well being, I now look back and see the advantages and safety I enjoyed. It is difficult to see that at a young age! I certainly didn't, but now I know I may be here and alive just because of it.

With two parents working the youth of this day and age will have much more difficulty in obtaining such safety, advantages and head start.

And, not only that, the world just seems to filled with more evil ...

JS

I see math as the smallest barrier to a ham ticket. Simple antenna calculations are about the most complex an amateur needs; these are only near the equivalent to what one needs to keep up their financial affairs, double check their utility bills, measure a room for new carpeting, etc.

Simple LC calculations, again, only use that same level of math, if say one wishes to design an antenna tuner, balun, filter, etc.

If you could give me something "absolutely specific", an example, perhaps I could see what is being suggested here ...

Perhaps you have forgotten that the general class exam is an entrance exam into the general class. It is not supposed to be a GRE (Graduate Record Exam). I memorized
the answers to the general class exam from the ARRL License
Manual in 1953 when I was only 14 years old.

Q: What is the unit of resistance?

A: The unit of resistance is the ohm.

At the time, I had no clue what resistance was. But I was really good at Morse Code so my technical ignorance didn't matter.

Len has a (small) point.

Generally speaking, 14 year olds lack the knowledgebase to properly pass the theory elements in higher license classes -- that is, without "memorization" or "association" of the question pool contents.

That's not to say there are not child prodigies who can do it. Certainly, I'm sure there are. However, if you took your average 10 or 12 year old and tried to teach him/her algebra, geometry, etc... it simply isn't going to happen. Thus, the only real way such an individual -- again, generally speaking -- can pass the theory examinations is thru a) fraud, b) rote memorization, or c) associative learning of the questions to answers.

What would be nice is, perhaps, a license class with very little theory, mostly regulations, which younger generations could "step into" the hobby with, gives them a broad spectrum of operating modes on limited frequencies, and as they mature, they can upgrade into higher a higher license class. Oops. That almost sounds like the novice license. We know the FCC isn't going to introduce any MORE license classes, the trend for the past 20? years has been to REDUCE licensing requirements and make it easier for anyone to get a ham license.

Actually, I may be 13+ years older than you. I was born Feb. 3, 1938, a died-in-the-wool Aquarian, seeker of wisdom and truth. I was 14 years old for only one month in 1953 when I got my conditional license. :-)

> I can only wish I have your mental, physical and social capabilities

Am I supposed to be senile by now or what? :-) Walter Maxwell is still going strong at 88. Once, on the Jack Parr show back in the 60's, I heard of a guy who died in a knife fight over a woman when he was 102 years old.
That certainly beats dying in a nursing home at 90. My Dad's oldest brother was still roofing houses at 80. My Mom's brother was still breaking horses at 80.

You are only as old as you feel. I am psychologically about ten years old, clearly a case of arrested

The difficulties arise in series versus parallel circuits for resistors versus inductors versus capacitors. They have no trouble with adding the values of resistors in series as that is logical to the students but the calculation procedure for resistors in parallel makes no sense to most when they have no background in electronics. They are able to do the procedure when you walk them through it. However, the fact that it doesn't make sense to them makes it difficult to remember the procedure. Then you go to capacitors and even though the equations are the same, it doesn't make sense that the series calculation and parallel calculations are the opposite of what you do with resistors. This is but one example.

For resistors in series:

R1 + R2 + R3 + ... = R(TOTAL)

For the special case of only two resistors in parallel:

R1 X R2
------- = R(TOTAL)
R1 + R2
```

general case:

1
----------------- = R(TOTAL)
1 1 1
R1 R2 R3

the above holds for inductance ...
and, as you say, capacitance the reverse ...

Really Dee, did that give you all that many problems? I see nothing there but basic math.

Seriously, give me an avg. youngster, 8th grade or older, and I will give you back a youngster capable of all the above ...

JS

Tsk, tsk. My advocacy (in the last few years) has been (among other political issues, all local) simply to end the morse code test for an amateur radio license. The morsemen just don't understand that and I neither pity nor "envy" them.

The morse code test has long been a political issue. Keeping it defies all logic (except to the terminally brainwashed) in the whole wider world of radio extending well beyond amateurism.

Now, last I looked, the US federal government will accept ANY citizen's comments on ANY subject...including radio regulations.
The US federal government does not "require" some kind of license in a particular radio service to "allow" comments to enter.
One can comment to the FCC on matters of Mass Media

(broadcast or wired interstate) without having to be IN those communications services or be "licensed" in them. It should be that way in regards to a hobby radio activity such as amateur radio...but some in here object to that so strongly that they continue to attack anyone not agreeing with their points of view.

You've mentioned that before in here and I respect that.

You've misjudged my point of view. I mention that I am (and have been for a long time) a paid electronics engineer (i.e., a "professional" in the generic sense of the term). It should, but does not (to some) indicate where my opinions are coming from. Nothing in that experience has led to any "hate of amateurs" or any sort of bigotry against amateur radio. What I AM against is the insular, fairy-tale sort of mindset, the one rooted in a time decades past, where old-time amateur radio
"is" what radio is all about and that long-time amateurs are
"more expert" in radio (entire) than all others.

>> Get a licence and try 'slumming' on the ham bands, Len. You won't be the >> only one, you know!

I do not regard "getting on" amateur radio as "slumming" or any other derogatory term. Amateur radio is basically a hobby endeavor involving radio and I think that all should have some form of hobby (their time permitting). I will never regard amateur radio as a form of modal-ethical lifestyle that rules
a life as some seem to do.

In the political battle of "pro-coders" versus no-code-test advocates, the NCTA have "won." FCC 06-178 will soon become law. What is seen in here now is a bunch of Sour Grapes sippers, Whining all sorts of things...and tossing out false charges of "motivation" and personal descriptions.

Sigh...the insular lifestylers of morsemanship in hamdom keep venting their spleens in here, attacking all who do not conform to Their desires. Once FCC 06-178 becomes law, I will drop commentary on the code test in here. I've said that many times before in here and now I've said it again. Watch this space for the spleen-venters angrily spout off on my "motivations" again. :-)

I have to admit that retribution does indeed feel good. To those rabid morsemen, I just "flip them the bird" and smile... :-)

Jimmie is no "moron." Brainwashed by the ARRL, yes, but otherwise no dummy.

Jimmie is clever. He makes his "charges" as "politely"
as possible yet are just another set of personal insults.
<shrug>

His kind have inhabited computer-modem comms since ARPANET was created. I've seen his kind on computermodem comms in all varieties in the two decades plus that I've done it.

On the contrary, I think children SHOULD have fun...when they have free time to experience play.

I regard amateur radio as an ADULT activity that requires some sense of responsibility, a responsibility that is not yet formed in most children until the entrance to teen years. Children have a whole lifetime to experience yet and cannot possibly know enough about adult society to be a deciding part of it.

Jimmie is obstinate to a remarkable degree. He wants, desires, may even have some form of orgasm in wishing to prolong a seven-year-old suggestion I made to the FCC in 1999. :-) Incredible. But, John, "you knew that," didn't you? :-)

He is a morseman amateur extra...he "knows" what is "right"

Tsk, John, calling these Mighty Macho Morsemen "children!"

Oh, that poor "bird." I keep flipping him so much to Jimmie...

It gave me no trouble whatsoever. It was a piece of cake compared to differential calculus, etc.

However it doesn't make sense to a homemaker or secretary. Therefore it becomes difficult for them to remember how to do it. It's not difficult for them to do actually just difficult to remember how to do it as they have nothing to tie it to so to speak.

I think you misunderstand me, Len. All I'm saying is that there are quite a few radio professionals who are also radio hams, and you ought to at least give it a try.

I have been opposed to code testing for the last 35 years, but it's all over bar the shouting.

As for the age limit thing, we used to have a lower limit of 14 in the UK, but it was dropped completely and never missed. The only really valid issue IMHO is safety from abuse by adults, and that is an issue with the Internet and in many other situations. I don't think it's a reason to keep kids off the air.

The only RL life case I know of involving ham radio was someone in an area where I used to live who allegedly enticed local boys into his radio shack, If you think about it, preventing them from having their own licences could have made his station all the more interesting to them.

Actually, that "computer look-alike" has already been done.
Twice. Maybe three times. Icom has a nice little box whose control panel is the PC itself.

But...I digress...unlicensed (in the amateur service) are NOT allowed to observe, conclude, or voice ANY opinion on ANYTHING in amateur radio! [but, "you knew that" dintya?]

Actually, no. I disagree with you. The Mighty Macho Morsemen have been brainwashed by just about the only publications group in the USA specializing in amateur radio. [they had reported (IRS) income of $12.5 million three years ago]

These 3Ms sill think that morsemanship is the end-all, be-all of "radio operating." Period, full stop. They are stuck in a time warp to the standards and practices of seven decades ago, never to advance. <shrug>

Dummies NO. Just brainwashed.

There's some truth to that. Dee has publicly announced that she "killfiled" me. :-)

Once, before the announcement of FCC 06-178, anyone against morse code testing was publicly labeled "politically incorrect"
and called names, indeed personally insulted, by several amateur extras in here. I'd be hard put to label Dee as a full hypocrite, only a partial one. She has encouraged the use of morse code on amateur radio and gone into "suggestions"
on how to be a good morseperson. <shrug>

Okay, so "Len" is charged with some kind of heinous "crime" in not adhering rigidly to the Good Book as sanctified by the ARRL.
[am I to say 20 Hail Hirams, go and sin no more? :-)]

On this first day of 2007 in the USA, all anyone need do is to read the posts by morse mavens in this newsgrope who are very very busy with "stooping to insults, name calling, denigration."
Lots of them, no need to repost what was posted today.

REAL debate is "enjoyable" only if there is "agreement" on a point of view of one side or the other. Too bad for 3Ms, FCC 06-178 has already been announced and that will be that.

NOW we will see who is the most-holy, self-righteous person inhabiting this Din of Inequity!

All I gotta say is that retribution is mighty sweet! :-)

And, that is why someone should just digest it, study the night before with their mentor, then reguratate it at the exam ... then quickly forget it ... if you need it in the future, a quick review and bam! it is at your disposal.

Welp, Heil is wrong. He says I'm anonymous when it is convenient for his argument, then he goes about calling me "Brian." I don't know

It's been a great idea since licenses were required.

Perhaps - but that was not Len's reason for wanting to ban under-14-year-olds from amateur radio.

As for your concern, consider this:

- Have there been any problems of that nature in amateur radio?

- If interested young people are banned from amateur radio, wouldn't they tend to gravitate more to the unlicensed services such as FRS/GMRS and cb?
Wouldn't the anonymous nature of such radio service be a better venue for problem-makers
than the callsign-using amateur radio service?

Seems to me the age-requirement thing is a solution in search of a problem.

Only one amateur on RRAP has ever said that studying wasn't required.
He was an Advanced and his name is/was Bruce. Said he took the Extra exam on a whim, a bet, and took $250 from a "No Code CBer." Passed the exam without any preparation, and didn't miss a single question.

However, Bruce was the closest thing to a Monkey that you'd find on RRAP.

And, yanno, 'specially the blond blue eyed female teachers, they bother me the most--wish they would come to me for "counseling" poor babies ... <evil grin>

Actually, I think they are the most hideous. According to statistics, the young men they molest all grow up and become molesters themselves. However, unlike their female counterparts they do NOT receive a simple slap on the hand, they do prison time ... time to reverse this perversity and punish the females equally.

Not on the issue of age requirements for an amateur radio license..

Doesn't matter, for a number of reasons.

First, I disagree that 14 year olds generally "lack the knowledgebase"
- particularly current-day
14 year olds. Having seen the curriculum for the local school district, the amateur radio exams aren't a problem.

Second, the mere fact of attaining a particular age does not mean the person can learn algebra, geometry, etc., or has learned it.

Third, young people have been passing the exams for as long as they existed. Way back in the days of essay exams and drawing diagrams (1948), a local 9 year old got her Class B license in front of the local FCC examiner. Granted, an above-average child - but should the above average be prevented from doing things because everyone can't do them? (I suggest the short story "Harrison Bergeron" by Kurt Vonnegut).

Fourth, and the big one: What problems in the amateur radio service have resulted from the lack of an age requirement? Can you or anyone else name even one enforcement action against a radio amateur younger than 14 years that had anything to do with the youth of the licensee?

Heck, look at the age of the worst Part 97 offenders in recent history, like Gerritsen.

> Thus, the only real way such an individual -- again, generally > speaking -- can pass the theory examinations is thru a) fraud, b) rote > memorization, or c) associative learning of the questions to answers.

Except for a), what's the problem? FCC doesn't care how someone passes
the exams as long as they don't cheat. Hams older than 14 have passed the tests by methods b) and c). If there's something wrong with the exam process, it applies to all ages.

How much of the written exam requires algebra and geometry, anyway?
Much of what I see in the practice exams is regulations (memorization), operating practices (more memorization), basic theory (science and a little math).

> What would be nice is, perhaps, a license class with very little theory,

So what's the problem?

Here's a direct, unedited, verbatim quote from Michael P. Deignan made on Monday, January 1, 2006 showing a typical example of "courteous, logical
'debate'" from a code-tested amateur extra:

>That's pretty much my mental image of Lennie. A senile old fart, rocking >in his corner rocking chair, who occasionally wipes the drool of his face, >plugs in his telephone to his 300 baud acoustic-coupler modem, and uses >his VT100 green-screen to spread hate and discontent.

Oh, my, Mikey forgot to include "wearing pampers" and "dribbling pablum" as another morse maven from New Jersey wrote... :-)

Tsk, "senility" hasn't yet set in, I have NO "rocking chair" and only "drool" mentally seeing certain women of great natural beauty. I can't remember ever using a "VT100", only one of the early Tektronix smart terminals and the last time I used an acoustic coupler
for a computer connection was in 1977 at Teledyne Electronics in Newbury Park, CA. The first mainframe
CRT terminal I used was an RCA-manufactured model
(made in Van Nuys, CA) back in 1973. [the RCA
"Spectra 70" mainframe was made there although I've never been a part of that work] I am rather familiar with "green screens" since that CRT phosphor has been common since I've been working in electronics (since 1952). My wife has a rocking chair (antique) but it is up at the northern house and was used by our grandniece during nursing of her new baby boy.

My PC is a standard Hewlett-Packard box purchased almost three years ago at Fry's Electronics in Burbank, CA, one with modest clock rate (1.2 GHz) but with a 56K modem on a plug-in. 40 GB HD, only 128 MB of RAM, with USB ports as well as standard serial and parallel interface. The monitor is a Samsung 712N LCD 17" flat screen that is almost two years old (also purchased at Fry's). A recent addition is an HP wireless keyboard and mouse (also from Fry's, a giant supermarket of consumer electronics in nearby Burbank). Note: The wireless mouse needs a new set of batteries almost every month...supplied by a set of NiMH batteries charged by an battery chargers formerly used only for household tasks. :-(

The office in our dwelling (the southern house) has "his and her" computer desks which I made in 1999 (six foot long glued wooden countertops sold for kitchens, with extra-wide keyboard shelves also made by me) including AC power outlets and modular telephone jacks at each "desk." Ample workspace. I've been a user of WordPerfect since release 5.1 and now have release 8. I have the full version of Adobe Acrobat and know how to use all softwares in my computer. That includes SPICE (a free download from Linear Technology) and my own-written packages...and am beginning to write programs directly for Windows using PowerBasic (MS quit supporting FORTRAN years ago and their version 9 and up Windows don't support all DOS-level programs). I've gotten a copy of (free) "JustBasic" and am trying that out...looks easier to use.

While I don't have the stamina or agility of a twenty-year-old now, my wife and I have not been pursuing (as we once did) an active lifestyle. That is due to my wife having undergone a successful hip joint replacement procedure in August. While there were (thankfully) no problems with that, the recovery period is about a year according to her surgeon. The scheduling of the surgery caused us to put off a trip to the midwest for our 55th High School Class Reunion (we went to the 50th in 2001, both of us being in the same class). We did go to my wife's 50th Reunion at Beloit College, Beloit, Wisconsin in 2005, driving the whole way. Car is a modest 2005 Chevrolet Malibu MAXX and I do most of the driving...still passing all required written tests with no physical problems preventing my holding a driving license.

>MD

Tsk, you are neither licensed Medical Doctor nor live in Maryland. :-)

>So, as you see Alun, nothing has changed over the past 7 years, except the >email address he uses when he posts.

MUCH has changed! See FCC 06-178 announced on 15th December! The USA has been attacked by kamikazi muslim extremists (not just pro-coder olde fahrts), Shrub sent the US off to war in Afghanistan and Iraq. Amateur radio "restructuring" happened (R&O FCC 99-412 released 30 December 1999) and the amateur radio licensee numbers have been slowly dropping. Now, I admit to not taking advantage of the free IEEE e-mail forwarding alias until a couple years ago somewhat long after I became a Life Member. My wife and I became "great grands" and joined the HDTV generation, getting excellent digital TV through Time-Warner cable service (subscriber box has a Tivo-like recorder capable of recording two programs at the same time for 20 hours maximum). Two of the ardent morse mavens in this newsgroup passed away and the ARRL staffers seem to avoid the newsgroup now. You've missed a LOT!

Oh, and not to forget: Michael P. Deignan got his MANY "club calls" taken away from him by the FCC! Sunnuvagun! The "RF Commandos" were mustered out of militant service? :-)

Mikey, I'll flip you something: The bird.

Byeeee...

Of course not. What's more, such discussions often result in more than

You're missing the point, Dave.

Brian was pushing the idea of "liberal disdain for the military" and cited Democrat FDR's alleged violent treatment of the Bonus Marchers as an example. But it was in fact the Republican Hoover Administration that used force against them.

The way Brian remembered the Bonus Marchers was inaccurate, but he presented it anyway, without checking his facts, and left it up to others to point out his mistakes.

Think about why.

IOW, no, you have no examples to report. Or rather more accurately: Not yet.

Yes, they are here with us - and always have been. Look at the decades of coverup in some cases.

The difference is that such things are getting open media attention
now,
where before they were a local scandal or covered up entirely.

The big question is this: Do we shut down everything that might turn into a problem? Close schools and extracurricular activities because of what a teacher or coach might do?

Or do we use common sense in our dealings with each other, and impose appropriate penalties on the violators?

That's a good point, Cecil! The exam is really meant to determine that the licensee has the minimum basic knowledge, not that the learning is all done.

Which reflects one of the Basis and Purposes of the ARS: education, specifically technical education.

> I memorized
> the answers to the general class exam from the ARRL License
> Manual in 1953 when I was only 14 years old.

FCC didn't care then how you passed the exam, as long as you didn't cheat.
They simply cared that you answered enough of the questions correctly
to get a passing score.

I got my Novice in 1967 at the age of 13, followed by Technician and Advanced
in 1968 at the age of 14. Hadn't even studied for the Advanced - I was there for the General code exam, passed it, and the FCC examiner suggested I try
the Advanced while I was there. I tried it, passed, and went home a new Advanced.
FCC didn't care how much I understood, just that I'd gotten enough right answers
without cheating.

I didn't memorize the LM or any other book - I just learned some radio basics.

Unless you are a crackerjack math wiz, these equations look totally different. Another point of confusion.

And the stuff cavemen knew would be stuff a city boy like myself doesn't have a clue about. How to hunt animals with nothing better than crude spears and rocks, knowing what plants are safe to eat and what's poisonous, etc.... Different environments, they didn't need to know about car insurance.

They would have been wrong anyway. That's just how it is with Morsemen.

Len, you seem to regard any disagreement with your opinions as a personal insult. You also seem to regard any correction of your mistakes as a personal insult.

Show us where I have really insulted you as a person. For example, have I ever called you insulting nicknames rather than just "Len" or "Mr. Anderson" or perhaps "Anderson"?

As for brainwashed - sorry, that's simply not true.

Just as long as it's not in amateur radio.

> I regard amateur radio as an ADULT activity

Why? FCC doesn't specify that in Part 97. Nor does any amateur radio organization. Amateur radio is for all ages - as long as they can meet the requirements and follow the rules.

> that requires some
> sense of responsibility, a responsibility that is not yet formed > in most children until the entrance to teen years.

Who are you to judge when a person is responsible enough?

And if young people haven't formed the responsibility, why don't we see problems resulting from the lack of an age requirement in the amateur radio service?

There has been mandatory licensing of amateur radio stations in the USA since 1912 - 96 years! In all that time, and the hundreds of thousands of amateurs licensed, there has never been a minimum age requirement for any class of amateur license. Some other countries like the UK and Canada had age requirements but dropped them.

If licensee-responsibility problems were going to happen because of the licensing of young radio amateurs, wouldn't we have seen them by now?
Perhaps the 96 year experiment was flawed, somehow?

Here's a hint, Len: One of the ways responsibility is formed is by being trusted to meet a standard. An amateur radio license is one form of that.

> Children have > a whole lifetime to experience yet and cannot possibly know > enough about adult society to be a deciding part of it.

How does being a radio amateur make a young person "a deciding part" of "adult society"? Having an amateur license doesn't give young people the right to vote, hold public office, or do anything special other than operate an amateur radio station.

Of course if someone is licensed at a young age, they may be influenced to enter a technical or scientific career, as I was. Their amateur radio
experience may count for something in the college admissions process,
too.
Why would we want to hinder those good things?

Perhaps the real explanation is that you can't deal with some things.
For example, you probably don't like the idea of a young radio amateur having accomplished things you have not.

Or it may be something like this:

"I've always had trouble with integrating "youngsters"
in what is a primarily _adult_ skill/technique recreational activity."

And when I took my tech tests back in 1976, I got correct just one more than the minimum required questions, and did better on the 5wpm code, receiving and sending. At the FCC in NYC. I thought i'd ace the written and barely squeak by on the code. Did a lot better when I took the (at the time) advanced and extra writtens to get my "nickel" extra upgrade, back in 2000.

All that "Bruce" could prove (assuming the quoted story has any truth to it) that he did in fact upgrade to extra, but not that he got all the questions right. Big whoop anyway...

The airport scenes in the film "Casablanca" were shot at Los Angeles Municipal Airport, now known as Van Nuys Airport, ICAO identifier "VNY." I flew in and out of there taking lessons four decades ago. Never met either Ingrid Bergman or Humphrey Bogart. Or even Claude Rains. I think Jimmie is trying to imitate Claude because he wants "to pick up all the usual (old) arguments," then interrogate them forever... :-)

The FCC received my 14-page Comment on FCC 99-143 on 15 Jan 1999. Makes it just a few days short 8 years.

I don't think that the subject bounced into RRAP until Hans Brakob talked about it. He let it drop. I let it drop. Jimmie NEVER drops anything.

"Behave" might be asking just too much. :-)

We'll all find out the effective date of FCC 07-178 after Tuesday.
The "fat lady" is coming to the microphone, music ready, the orchestra warming up and soon she'll sing. It's almost a "Gotterdammerung!" after slipping...

I would really be surprised if they happened to mentioned some particular child molester was a ham. Me thinks you too anxious to "blow past" that one ...

If you notice, they usually don't mention what church a particular child molester attends, what club or organizations they attend or are a member of, what movies they like, if they were in the boy scouts, what their mother maidens name was, what parks are near their homes, where they shop, what make of car they drive, who their friends were, what party republican/democrat, what their favorite color is, what HOBBIES they had, etc., etc.

Priest, school teacher, sunday school teacher, public official ... now that they mention, good reason too ...

But, you are right about it being "dealt with differently back then." Personally I know of one ham from the small town of my birth who was molesting his own daughters. I was real young at the time, all I remember is he and his family were forced to leave town ... but then, it was just something you did not talk about back then, I always found that strange ... one other guy to, a truck driver, same thing, molesting his daughter and her friends, don't know if he had a CB in his rig--they never mentioned that either ...

This is an item that people overlook when they talk about cavemen or "primitive aborigines", etc. Most of us would die before we learned enough to survive under the conditions they lived in. Even a genius, out of his own environment, is helpless unless and until he learns how to survive in the new one. Our caveman ancestors were no dummies.

Ahhh, now you are looking good Dee.

This is what I have always known. It is not wrote memorization which is a true sign of greater intelligence, it is the ability to meet the unknown on uncertain terms and solve the riddles.

It is the ability to be dropped in the middle of the unknown and unfamiliar and come walking out alive ... I think I am nearing the end of this newsgroup now, damn jungle in here!!! <tense-strained-look>

To the true explorer, logic is his compass.

I don't "misunderstand" much, Alun.

My good friend Allan Walston (W6MJN), friend and former group manager Jim Hall (KD6JG), and military service comrade Gene Rosenbaum (N2JTV) have all been professionals involved in radio. All are against the elimination of the morse code test in US amateur radio but I do not hold that against them. They are good people.

"Give it a try?" I've already done that as a "third party" on amateur radio bands. Good grief, Alun, I really have communicated by radio many times in the past fifty years...and over more of the EM spectrum than is allocated to US radio amateurs. I know how it works. I've had to "know" several different radio service protocols and have no trouble adapting to any of them. Just what is it I am supposed to "learn" in such "having fun?"

That's an honest question. I don't lack for human companionship, friends or much else. Having once kept many radio circuits operating 24/7, transmitting 'vital'
messages all day long, I don't regard "collecting brief, momentary contacts" as "fun." If others like that, fine, more power to them. Last I looked, 'operating' a radio is not the end-all, be-all of amateur radio.

>I have been opposed to code testing for the last 35 years, but it's all >over bar the shouting.

As Yogi Berra was quoted as saying "It ain't over till its over!"

The "fat lady" hasn't sung yet and the Federal Register won't be issued until Wednesday. FCC 06-178 has been announced but it is ONLY an announcement and not yet law.

>As for the age limit thing, we used to have a lower limit of 14 in the UK,
>but it was dropped completely and never missed.

I'm NOT into that "age thing." Almost 8 years ago my particular Reply to Comment on FCC 98-143 had a "suggestion" to that effect on the last of 14 pages of text accepted by the FCC.

If anyone wants to see the public record, they only need go to the FCC ECFS and bring up the 13 Jan 99 Comments. In that they will find out that my suggestion was THEN prompted by a (referenced) ARRL news page wherein two 6-year-olds were shown in a picture as "the youngest hams."

According to the FCC regulations then and now, any licensed radio amateur can operate on permitted bands BY THEMSELVES. There's NO law saying that 6-year-olds "must" have parental supervision when doing so. They (the sixes) could legally send RF anywhere in the world, all by themselves.

Way back about 7 years ago, I stated that CHILDREN (specifically pointing to the six-year-olds) don't have the RESPONSIBILITY nor the requisite wisdom to behave properly in a largely-adult endeavor. That hit a terrible sore point with all the morsers who had (or cared for) children since, having passed a high-rate code test, they were now PhD-equivalent pediatric "experts." :-(

I've tried to let the matter drop but Miccolis MUST try to bring that subject up again, and again, and again. I suspect that I set an arbitrary age limit of 14 and Miccolis got his first license at age 14. See the connection?

I let this age thing drop years ago and won't pursue it any more than I did almost 8 years ago. I am getting annoyed that Miccolis keeps bringing it up with supposed "motivations" that are impure or immoral or somehow "against him." That's why he gets the bird flipped at him...

>The only RL life case I know of involving ham radio was someone in an area >where I used to live who allegedly enticed local boys into his radio shack,
>If you think about it, preventing them from having their own licences could >have made his station all the more interesting to them.

I'm not going to venture into this area. I have NEVER done such a thing, have no desire to "entice anyone" into my electronics workshop, office, vehicle, or home for ANY immoral purposes. I have a lovely wife, my high school sweetheart in fact, and we've been together for longer than that supposed moral perfidy that Miccolis keeps crowing about, the one done almost 8 years ago on the last page of 14 Comments submitted on 98-143.

Got that Alun? Got that Miccolis? Got that Heil? Good, now DROP that 8-year-old "subject" and quit all trying to pin some kind of moral-ethical "rep" on me. I'm starting to get a bit pissed off here. Anyone who wants to pin some kind of "immorality" rap on me can save up for legal fees (the billing ain't cheap). I can afford legal billings. I can't afford that kind of ROI "fun" to get a ham license. It ain't worth THAT.

Alun, if you feel you've been "misunderstood," then I would suggest you check your own syntax on what you say in here. There be all sorts of trolls eager to pop up from under their bridges, ready to talk trash and nonsensical "charges" of perfidy here. They will take the slightest thing out of context and manufacture (indeed custom-make) something entirely different than what was originally written.

I am familiar with the saying "figures don't lie,but liers can
you say about the unemployment figures being suspicious. The pols certainly have plenty to gain by keeping those figures low. But what would be the point of skewing the amateur statistics. I don't understand what the payoff would be to manipulate them on purpose.
I admit when talking about numbers and stats I tend to have bouts of

There has been utter silence in news.groups and in news.groups.proposals with respect to any new, moderated group in the rec.radio hierarchy. As the month of January unfolds, will that continue to be the case?

If so, Mark Morgan and his mindless minions of moronity will have won.

Sorry about that. Didn't mean for my paranoia to be catching ...

I am just looking about for means to double check these figures.
Supposed to work that way, I think, we should be looking over the gov'ts shoulder--just to keep 'em honest, mind you!

The reason why they would skew figures? I really can't point a finger at anything.

Like I say, I remember when YOU COULD trust your gov't, times have Double-checking the government isn't "paranoia." It's just a means for concerned citizens to be alert and aware. Most citizens don't give a damn as long as they can gripe and moan about "the government" doing nasty; few of those ever try to DO anything to make it "good."

>I am just looking about for means to double check these figures.
>Supposed to work that way, I think, we should be looking over the gov'ts
>shoulder--just to keep 'em honest, mind you!

Anyone can freely access the FCC amateur radio databases over the Internet. There are two flavors: Weekly and Daily. The weekly Zip files are found at:

http://wireless.fcc.gov/uls/data/complete/l-amat.zip

Note: If it were capitalized, the file would be "L-AMAT.ZIP"

Beware on SIZE. In checking today (2 Jan 07), the weekly file for 31 Dec 06 was 80.1 MB in size! The weekly Applications file for 1 Jan 07 was 87.7 MB. If you have only dial-up service it will take hours at 56K rate.
One needs DSL or faster to save time.

The records fields are explained by the FCC for delimiters and content and abbreviations. To make a searchable text file suitable for sorting is a fairly easy programming task even for beginning computer programmers.

>The reason why they would skew figures? I really can't point a finger
>at anything.

Not a problem for me. :-) Case in point for amateur radio is Joseph Speroni, AH0A, an obvious pro-code proponent. Speroni boosts the use of "CW" on his website www.ah0a.org and allows free download of a code cognition training program, "Morse Academy."

Speroni's "statistics" have always been slanted to showing code testing in the best possible light and downgrading the no-code-test class. That happened on the release of NPRM 98-143 regarding amateur radio restructuring. A search of FCC Petitions and Comments for same will show that Speroni has made several Petitions and many comments to retain the code test,
all of the Petitions eventually rejected by the FCC
in following Reports and Orders.

At this point, be aware that Miccolis will be champing at the bit in regards to the Speroni
description above. He will - undoubtedly - be writing "that is plain and simply wrong" even though the observations I gave are quite obvious to any reader.

A more honest set of statistics is provided by
www.hamdata.com which apparently has no preconceived bias or mode favoritism. Maybe.

>Like I say, I remember when YOU COULD trust your gov't, times have >changed ...

Ahhhh...in seeing all kinds of "statistics" put out by everyone from non-government individuals to market companies over the last 50 years, I'll put the onus on not trusting the non-government statistics. One of the more blatant stats compilers, Neilsen (on TV viewership), is questionable based on their very low sampling rate. However, those figures (bought and paid for by broadcasters) don't seem to be questioned in regards to new programs or cancellations of programs. They don't have larger sample sizes for more accurate figures because that increases their cost and that reduces their profit margin. Neilsen and their contemporaries are selling a PRODUCT (the "statistics") and want to maximize ROI. Those TV
"stats" companies have managed to convince buyers (and the general public) into believing they are absolutely "honest" and "accurate." AS IF... :-)

Insofar as amateur radio data, the FCC ULS is pretty complete and its not that hard to search individuals' data. The only problem is the massive file size of the single databases. Prior to the ULS the FCC had smaller, regional databases which could, with lots of time on-line, download at 2.4K rates.

Note: There are weekly and daily and quarterly databases on over two dozen other radio services and special radio service groups also available for free (if one has high-rate connections).

Informationally yours,
LA

I'm sorry, but I have this mental image of you standing on a heap of garbage at the local landfill with arms outstreached and saying, "This is all mine." Bwahahahahahaha! 'Cause that's all you've got Mark - a garbage heap.

On the other hand, when I want serious discussion of amateur radio matters, I go to a place where you're not allowed - http://www.qrz.com.

Soy yer nora, Mark; soy yer nora. You were kicked off qrz.com for a very good reason. Back into my twit filters you go.

Jeez, this group is like watching Coronation Street on TV.....you could miss 15 consecutive years of the show, and pick right up where you left off..... :)

SC has been bragging for quite some time now about No-Coders - but has "yet" to show where "he" has ever been licensed as a ham at all let alone "with" code. I don't care to give my call here - but have in the past and will again if asked. It doesn't prove a thing one way or another. My call - though I'm an extra - happens to be my old KA Novice Call sign. Been an extra quite a while. Went from Novice - Technician (80s) - Advanced - Extra.

It is amazing you guys keep him in entertainment by acknowledging his ridiculous remarks. GET A LIFE - SC -whether we like it or not - CODE IS GONE. You're beating a horse that has been dead quite a while. You've been on this stupid kick for about 5 months now. Don't you have anything better to do?

But without background information, much of which is rote-memorized,

There's not just one type of intelligence, either.

Algebra and geometry isn't taught until 9th grade. Trig not until 10th or 11th. Vectors possibly in 11th or 12th.

You must have a lot of 14 year olds graduating from high school.

True. It could mean that the child simply memorized or word-associated the correct answers.

> So what's the problem?

Ultimately, I have no real problem with hams under 14. I think it is a good idea. However, I do think there are valid points from the other side of the equation. However, I do not see the FCC addressing them in any way, so, things in their current form are likely to remain the way they are, which is fine IMO.

These are the only people even interested in the data. The only entity that has the original records is the government. Everyone can download the raw data. Thus anyone who wants to can cross check the information presented. I've no issue with anyone's presentation so long as they clearly define what was included and excluded and why.

Nothing wrong with that.

How?

Exactly how can the number of licenses be "slanted" to show any testing
in a good or bad light?

Does posting license numbers somehow bar the person posting them from his Constitutional right of free speech?

It seems to me that what you are saying, Len, is just a version of the old ad-hominem fallacy. What you are saying is that a pro-code person's numbers cannot be accurate, even though you have absolutely no evidence that they're not 100% accurate.

> A more honest set of statistics is provided by
> www.hamdata.com which apparently has no preconceived
> bias or mode favoritism. Maybe.

Exactly how can the number of licenses be "slanted" to show any testing
in a good or bad light?

The hamdata.com numbers are derived from the same FCC database as the AH0A numbers and the ones I post.

The big difference is that the hamdata.com numbers include current unexpired licenses and licenses that are expired but still in the 2 year grace period. They also include club, military and other station-only licenses.

The numbers I post do not include expired licenses that are in the grace period, nor club, military and other station-only numbers. This is done so that the numbers indicate how many currently-licensed-by-FCC amateurs are out there - just as is explained in the postings I make with the numbers.

The AH0A numbers are derived by methods explained on the website. www.ah0a.org

All three sets of numbers are equally accurate IF you know and keep in mind what they include and exclude.

Don't you have a connection faster than dialup, Len? Even I don't use dialup anymore.

Just keep thinking that fat ass. You and your Pedo fatass bung-hole buddy are going to get what is coming to you. Especailly, the Pedo. I'm sure I gave him a Christmas he won't soon forget. 2007 is going to be even worse. He'd better save his tax returns this year because it won't be long before DirecTV starts taking a bite out of his SS. If we are lucky though, maybe his neighbors will kill his pedo ass first.

If we are lucky.

Ain't it something, though! :-)

Happy Holiday time to you, Leo, long time no "see."

I would consider that the pro-coders in this newsgroup consider themselves ultra-qualified for judgement. They took the code-test here at maximum rate and are thus supremely "qualified" to judge anything or anybody!
Those who haven't been federally tested for morse code cognition skill are "untouchables," "always making mistakes" and/or "always wrong." :-)

It's like Inja doncha know?

Well, "Coronation Street" isn't a big thing down here.
Don't know if PBS carries it locally. Try "Midsomer Murders" perhaps...the inspectors busy trying to catch the evil-doers that killed off code-testing in US
amateur radio. :-)

Cordially yours,

But, but, but...we're still morally obligated to that good old Latin phrase: Quis custodiet, ipsos custodes. (more or less,
been a lonnnng time since my Latin classes).
Translated to English: "Who watches the watchers?"

Not to worry...ALL pro-coders are implicitly 'honest.' It is those nasty, evil NCTAs who are the trouble-makers! :-)

Heck yes, that's a given...with or without Streisand. :-)

What can you expect from the suddenly-deprived-of-federal-welfare-

Would be nice if they could go and eat that crow instead.

There seems to be a great deal of debate on that issue, Len.

There are many good people who have come out against the elimination of morse testing. You've frequently demonstrated that you hold it against a fair number of them.

> "Give it a try?" I've already done that as a "third party"

That's nice, Len. My parents have been on the telephone end of phone patches. While they knew that the calls were being made by a radio amateur, I'm sure that they never thought they were participating in amateur radio.

Amateur radio is not about "been there, done that, got the T-shirt", Len. Neither is it a game of "I know how it works."

You don't have to learn anything, Len.

Many of us enjoy contacts lasting an hour or hours on a regular basis with friends we've known for years.

That's all the amateur radio license really permits us to do, Len. It permits us to operate. You may listen all you like without any license whatever. You may build a transmitter capable of transmitting high power on the amateur bands. Without that license, you may not operate it or test it.

Right. Your "suggestion" still stands in the FCC records.

The FCC says they do have the RESPONSIBILITY, Len. The FCC issued them a license. That indicates that the Commission believes that they have the wisdom.

What qualifies you as a pediatric "expert", Len?

You surely have. As long as you post here, it isn't going to happen any more than your "sphincter post" about what is like to undergo an artillery barrage (that you never went through) is going to go away. Come to think of it, your posts about others dishonoring veterans aren't going away in light of your post of the other day. You really are a little weasel.

You suspect that you set an arbitrary age of 14. I can confirm it for you. You did it. I don't know if Jim MUST bring the subject up or if he simply desires to bring it up. I know that if he ever drops it, I'll gladly bring it up periodically. You've claimed to be all about removing morse testing. Your words on instituting a minimum age for licensing prove that your claim isn't true.

> I let this age thing drop years ago...

Your words still stand in the public record.

That's awfully big of you, Len.

It is evident that you don't like having your own words come back to bite you. Those words are more evidence that your claims of only being interested in the elimination of morse testing aren't true.

Of course - what they do is to carefully define what "unemployed" means so that the numbers aren't too worrisome.

Sounds to me like what is done in CA is to eliminate those who have no job and have exhausted their unemployment benefits, those who have no job and have given up looking, those who are "underemployed" (say, working part time because it's all they can find right now)
etc.

There's nothing wrong with defining "unemployed" a certain way IF the definition is clearly stated so that we know who is included and who isn't.

FCC amateur license figures may be checked by anyone who bothers to download the database and go through it.

I don't see any way for govt. to manipulate those license figures. The database contains all current licenses and all licenses in the 2 year grace period.

It's clear why someone would want to report a low unemployment rate - makes the economy, and the current administration, look good. It's also clear why someone would want to report a high unemployment rate - makes the economy, and the current administration, look bad.

But why would someone want to manipulate amateur radio license numbers? Overstating the numbers would make amateur radio look bigger than it is, while understating them would make amateur radio look smaller than it is. Who would benefit?

Right now there are about 655,000 current unexpired FCC-issued licenses held by individuals. Do you think that number is high or low?

No, what she's saying, in effect, is that the Major League Baseball Players' Association (for example) doesn't bother keeping track of the license data because they couldn't possibly care less. The FCC and we hams are the only people who are interested in the data at all. :-)

Recently, there have been unsubstantiated claims that at some time in the past I proposed some sort of "no-test" amateur radio service.

Considering the demonstrated memory inaccuracy of the first claimer, perhaps what he remembers is this:

<Cecil.A.Mo...@IEEE.org>
writes:

> I have suggested that an exam on >the Smith Chart be an option instead of the Morse >code exam.

Sounds like a good idea to me. In fact, should the treaty be changed, the Smith Chart test could replace the code test. Understanding the Smith Chart and being able to use one actually demonstrates several areas of knowledge and skill. The tests would consist of interpreting a solved problem on one chart, (the "understanding" test) then solving a different problem on a blank chart (the "solution" test). At first, most hams and wouldbe hams would would simply study the Smith Chart and pass the tests.

But then the trouble would start...

Some hams who had not passed the Smith Chart test might say that those who had passed the test were being "elitist" about their Smith chart skill and knowledge. The term "chartless Extra" would be considered an insult by some, a badge of honor by others. Some would grumble that since they have no desire to design antenna/transmission line systems, they should not be required to pass a Smith Chart test. They would point out that other services do not have Smith chart testing, and so neither should hams.

Defenders of the tests ("Smithys" or "chartists") would claim that the Smith chart was a "uniquely practical, efficient, and universal" tool for antenna/transmission line work. They would recall how lives had been saved by hams able to quickly design matching sections to permit using an antenna on a frequency it was not designed for, and would predict dire consequences in the event of widespread disaster.

Those opposed to the test ("Smithless" or "nochartists") would argue that newer, more accurate, less error prone software systems had left the Smith chart in the dust. "We don't want to use OLD design methods" and "The Chart is too slow and error prone" would be their rallying cry. There would be testimonials by hams who had worked 300 DXCC countries using QRP and a dipole without any reference to a Smith Chart, and claims of others who "had rote-memorized the Chart and promptly forgot it all as soon as the test was over". Many would claim that young people, used to solving even minor addition problems on computers, had no interest in learning old fashioned graphical methods. Some would say that the emphasis on such a timeworn, old fashioned, crude graphical method of solving problems made ham radio look backward and nonprogressive, and was downright embarrassing. Ph.D's in EE would claim that they had designed entire radio communication systems without use of the Smith Chart, yet were kept out of ham radio because of the test.

The arguments would become more heated and insulting over time. Nochartists would point out that the Chart test was discriminatory, because, for example, blind people could not fulfill the letter of the law in passing the test. Some would claim to be "chart impaired" and unable to pass the test due to inability to do geometry. The question of "chart waivers" would be raised, and much angry invective spewed over "chart fraud" and "open chart pools". There would be a demand that the use of graphical calculators be allowed in the tests.

Chartists would claim that accomodations such as Braille Smith charts met the intent of the law. Old timers ("quillpenners") would recall a time when all charting was done by hand, in ink, on chart paper costing the modern equivalent of several dollars a sheet. (They used ink because they were so confident of doing it right the first time).

The use, or nonuse, of the Chart by military and commercial services would be hotly debated. Some nochartists would claim that the military stopped using the Chart during WW2, while some chartists would claim that the Smith chart played a crucial role in the Kosovo crisis.

A popular summer blockbuster movie starring Jodie Foster, Will Smith, Jeff Goldblum and Bill Paxton would have a plot in which alien invaders were detected, then repelled by means of a hastily reactivated surplus Russian over-the-horizon "woodpecker" radar system. The critical plot element would be the heroine's use of the Smith Chart to match the "woodpecker" transmitter to the Arecibo dish. (How the Russian radar wound up in Puerto Rico would be left unexplained).

The ARRL, Gordon West, and W5YI would be caught in the middle of the debate.
>From the first, they and others would have marketed a whole line of Smith chart training aids, including books, videotapes, and software. W1AW would transmit SSTV programs explaining chart use, and MFJ would market "portable personal chart trainers". Claims of monetary interest in the production of Chart materials would be made and denied.

Nochartists would claim that the chartists were just "old fs" who were supporting the status quo due to "chart chauvinism", and did not understand the realities of the modern age. A few chartists would claim that the nochartists were just whiners who were too lazy to even learn how to hold a compass correctly. The need for "high speed chart tests" would be debated hotly, many claiming that no time limit should be placed on the chart test. "One Chart per week satisfies the law" would be their claim, while skilled chartists spoke of doing 30, 40, even 50 charts per hour, and being able to "see the solution without even making a mark on the chart".

Eventually the nochartists would organize a group to fight the chart test. The founders of No Charts International would claim that they had no problem with anyone USING the Chart, just the mandatory test requirement. "It's not the CHART, it's the TEST" would be a common rallying cry.

And everyone would await the FCC's ruling...

Who's gonna ride Bodacious?
Who's gonna tame him down?
Look out for Bodacious,
he's bound to hold his ground.
Here comes Bodacious, ya'll just step aside.
Big and bad Bodacious takes a toll from those who ride.

I am a conspiracy of one. :-)

Just a minute...Marty L. just handed me some more Theses, says
I have to nail them on the church door. Be back in a while...

Some things are just too much. Why, at Christmas I got this Clapper

There you go again, making false accusations.

You said "At least that many" leaving room for more than four. So...
how many more?

I'm guessing that not only could that have been the one, but that it is the one. It'd be my bet that a certain individual could set up his Google search to look for his own posts in conjunction with a no written test theory and find responses to your post on the Smith Chart test.

Go figure!

I'm not suggesting anything about you, Len.

All I'm saying is that I've never heard of a case of a ham enticing children over the air to abuse them, although I've heard of many similar cases involving the Internet. That doesn't mean it's never happened, only that I don't know of any cases.

Yes, Wabbit, you surely do -- especially when you try to make it look like Mark's the one posting your dreck.

One item from FCC in today's Federal Register (Vol 72, Number 2)

It's not the Report and Order, though.

--

The Federal Register can be viewed online at:

http://www.gpoaccess.gov/fr/index.html

Today's edition of the Federal Register can be viewed online at:

http://www.access.gpo.gov/su_docs/aces/fr-cont.html

(HTML)

(PDF)

Agencies are listed in alphabetic order, making it easy to find the FCC.

Happy Holidays to you too, Len. It has been quite a while!

I've been reading the group occasionally, but there hasn't been much useful communications rising above the psychotic rantings of the crazy few for a long time.......until the code decision finally came down!

Well, our favourite representative pro coders on this group certainly seem to! I see that our good friend Captain Arithmetic is busily preparing to chart the demise of the ARS in the post-Morse apocalypse, ham by ham. Somehow, he's changed his tune, though....used to be that Morse would never be dropped - now, it appears that he knew it all the time! A true visionary indeed.....

....and, qualified they were, anyway. The new regs eliminate code entirely from US Amateur licensing, leaving them 'qualified' in something which no longer exists, from a licensing perspective. In other words....useless as a 'status' indicator (as you will be able to reach the coveted Extra level, for example, without knowing any Code at all). Just like holding thousands of pesos in old Mexican money....you ain't rich anymore!

Morse remains an option up here in Canada, for testing and qualification for HF-band access. Either pass the Morse test, or score an extra 10% above the pass mark on the written exam, and you're on the air on HF. An interesting compromise!

NO NEED for a report and order on the fr.

Since the FC already publically announced the acceptance of no code, that effectively permits anyone with a CSCE for general or technician class element 2 CSCE or license to use HF SSB NOW in the permitted frequencies.

There is no statute that requires publication in the FR before a requirement is effective, only that the regulating agency agree in principal to the new requirement. Such a statute would obviously be unconstitutional. It is merely a government formality which cannot be enforced by the courts.

The FCC did not publish an effective date nor did they choose to publish one in the federal register. That means you can transmit SSB voice at this very moment.

Go ahead element 2 or 3 CSCE'S or tech license holders, you can transmit NOW! I look forward to seeing you on the bands (though I do spend a lot of time in the CW portions).

no mere elelment 2 CSSE wopuld cover that the element 2 test gets you a tech license the only people a new element 2 csse would affect would be a novice and and there are damn few of them and fewer still that are both alive active and still in radio

I agree it would be difficult for the FCC to enforce the old rule and prevent me from operating on 10m right now but Hams would do so most likely

You mean I'm not breaking FCC regulations?

What about usenet regulations?

I think you should google up "definition: anonymous."

You seem to be having problems with it.

REPORT AND ORDER AND ORDER ON RECONSIDERATION

----------> Adopted<---------- : December 15, 2006 Released:
December 19, 2006

By the Commission:

And,

Generally, the NPRM proposed to eliminate the requirement that an individual must pass an international Morse code telegraphy examination in order to qualify for any amateur radio operator license.

As discussed below, ---------->this R&O implements<---------- the proposals set forth in the NPRM. Specifically, we will amend our Amateur Radio Service rules by:

. revising the examination requirements for obtaining a General Class or Amateur Extra Class amateur radio operator license; and

. revising the operating privileges for Technician Class licensees to include the operating privileges that are authorized to Novice Class licensees.

So go ahead and transmit!

I doubt it. Until it shows in the Federal Registry, the old rules are still in force. And then the old rules stay alive until 30 days elapses.

Besides, if all someone has are CSCEs, they don't even have a callsign, so how could they operate?

And those CSCEs will NOT be accepted for processing for the upgrade until the effective date listed in the Federal Register. So if the CSCE expires before that effective date, they will have to retest.

Subject: newsgroup fa, net, etc.

Won't we need to change the .ngfile also? Also is ALL an acceptable newsgroup
on the left side of the dot such that ALL.ALL will catch everything?

Rusty is right (or is that "Rusty is Wright"?) - we have ALL in our
.ngfile
so I tend to forget this. ALL.ALL may or may not work, but ALL certainly does.

I plan to make the change on Tuesday unless something horrible happens.

Mark,
Yes, the .ngfile needs to be fixed and maybe we should use .net instead of .ALL, talk to the guys and let me know what you think.

By the way, my friggin 8-track just went out in my pinto so i think i'm going to pick me up one of those new Casset Tape decks. Those things are outta sight, I hear Rick James has one! He's my hero, anyway get back to me soon on that other stuff.

Yeah, but it's not the oldest one on the net. Look at this site:

http://communication.ucsd.edu/bjones/Usenet.Hist/Nethist/0061.html
The earliest post at that site is from May 27, 1980

Lots of other ancient stuff on there too...

Drew

Hope I didn't do that!

Mark,
Yes, the .ngfile needs to be fixed and maybe we should use .net instead of .ALL, talk to the guys and let me know what you think.

By the way, my friggin 8-track just went out in my pinto so i think i'm going to pick me up one of those new Casset Tape decks. Those things are outta sight, I hear Rick James has one! He's my hero, anyway get back to me soon on that other stuff.

Yeah, but it's not the oldest one on the net. Look at this site:

http://communication.ucsd.edu/bjones/Usenet.Hist/Nethist/0061.html
The earliest post at that site is from May 27, 1980

Lots of other ancient stuff on there too...

Drew

Hope I didn't do that!

Won't we need to change the .ngfile also? Also is ALL an acceptable newsgroup
on the left side of the dot such that ALL.ALL will catch
everything?

Rusty is right (or is that "Rusty is Wright"?) - we have ALL in our
.ngfile
so I tend to forget this. ALL.ALL may or may not work, but ALL
certainly does.

Apparently nothing too horrible happened after they changed the .ngfile

because we're still pecking out our little newsgroup messages all over the world 24 years later.

Yeah, but it's not the oldest one on the net. Look at this site:

http://communication.ucsd.edu/bjones/Usenet.Hist/Nethist/0061.html
The earliest post at that site is from May 27, 1980

Lots of other ancient stuff on there too...

Drew

Hope I didn't do that!

Won't we need to change the .ngfile also? Also is ALL an acceptable newsgroup
on the left side of the dot such that ALL.ALL will catch
everything?

Rusty is right (or is that "Rusty is Wright"?) - we have ALL in our

so I tend to forget this. ALL.ALL may or may not work, but ALL certainly does.

Apparently nothing too horrible happened after they changed the .ngfile because we're still pecking out our little newsgroup messages all over the world 24 years later.

Mark,
Yes, the .ngfile needs to be fixed and maybe we should use .net instead of .ALL, talk to the guys and let me know what you think.

By the way, my friggin 8-track just went out in my pinto so i think i'm going to pick me up one of those new Casset Tape decks. Those things are outta sight, I hear Rick James has one! He's my hero, anyway get back to me soon on that other stuff.

Perhaps but a license upgrade on paper is an administrative exercise subject to the administrivia that you mention. In this case the bureaucracy may not (yet)properly reflect the law..

On the other hand, the legality is defined by the adoption and release dates of the Report and Order that adopts the NPRM. The R&O was released on Dec.
19 but was actually effective on the adoption date of Dec. 15 2006.

Legally, Part 97 does not state that you must be a general class or technician etc. to transmit on certain bands. It merely states that one must pass element 2 to transmit SSB on 10m segmets, element 3 to transmit SSB on other segments etc.

The license itself only reflects what the law requires (this may be an exception as you point out). The law governs who may transmit where and what element credits must be obtained before doing so.

However, actual statute law trumps bureaucracy. The Federal Register merely records laws that have already been enacted. The Constitution was in effect prior to the existence of a FR and nowhere is the FR mentioned in today's constitution.

Then why are you so interested in the amateur radio regulations, Len?

That's nice.

Transmitting - not receiving. As part of a large team, too.

Did you control the content of the messages? Did you decide what frequency, mode, or antenna to use?

> I don't regard "collecting brief,

Then don't do that. Amateur radio is about much more than contesting or DXing.

Actually, it is - because that's what the license is for. Anybody can listen, anybody can design/build/repair/align radio equipment without any license at all. What requires a license is transmitting from - operating - an amateur radio station.

What does "NOT into that "age thing."" mean, Len?

Does it mean you admit you were wrong about it?

Or just that you don't want to hear about it any more, because it shows you are interested in far more than just eliminating Element 1?

All petitions, proposals, comments, reply comments and similar communications to FCC are "suggestions" that FCC change the rules (or not) to agree with what the "suggester" wants.

Actually, they were four years old at the time of being licensed.

The article, with picture, is here:

Why is that a problem, if the children in question can pass the license exams?

Len assumes the parents and families of these children, all of whom are licensed radio amateurs, would not be responsible about their children's use of radio unless the LAW bans them from being licensed until a certain age.

It seems you still think that way.

FCC disagrees with you. And so do I. Is that wrong of us?

Your solution was to propose an age requirement of 14 years for any class of amateur license. Not six years, not eight years, not some sort of limited license or parental permission supervision thing, but a complete ban on all licensing of people under 14 years of age regardless of any other factors.

Do you still think an age requirement is a good idea, Len?

The key piece of missing information was how the lack of such an age requirement has caused problems with the amateur radio service.

IOW, what Len proposed was a new and completely unnecessary restriction on amateur radio licensing, based on nothing more than his own idea that amateur radio is "an ADULT activity". He ignores the many examples of responsible young people in amateur radio, and would ban all under 14 from it.

> That hit a terrible sore point with all the morsers

Len's not a parent, nor a teacher, nor a child expert in any way. Nor does he know the families in question. But he knows that the licensing of anyone under 14 years old must be stopped, even after 96 years!

Someone else claimed you weren't against children having fun. I disproved that claim by bringing up some facts. Is that wrong?

What connection?

I got my license at age 13, Len. No big deal - that wasn't anywhere near a record even back then. I was on the air at that age, unsupervised, sending radio signals all over the world. With a transmitter I built myself, too!

You still believe in it now, though, don't you? Your statements here prove it.

You're getting your attributions mixed up, Len. I don't say your motivations are "impure" or "immoral". In fact, I don't think anyone did.

I just say the whole age thing is a bad idea.

> That's why he

For telling the truth and disagreeing with you.

btw, your age-requirement "suggestion" was made in a Reply Comment, not a Comment. Reply Comments are not supposed to include new subjects - they are only supposed to reply to the comments of others. Procedural mistake, Len.

Nobody's talking about you in that context, Len. If you think they

You mean the bad idea of an age requirement? That's just a bad idea.

Here's a fun fact: You didn't get an amateur radio license before age 14, either.

> Got that Alun? Got that Miccolis? Got that Heil?

Got what? That you have a nice life?

How come you address Alun by his first name, but others by their last names?

You mean like when someone says I proposed a "no-test" amateur radio service, but cannot provide any evidence of it?

Len, is there a rule that says something cannot be discussed after a certain amount of time?
What's the time limit - five years? Three years? One year? - beyond which something is too old to bring up again?

I'd really like to know.

100% WRONG!!!!!!!!!!

Any law or regulation in the USA becomes effective ONLY after it is PROMULGATED!!

For laws and regulations at the Federal Level that PROMULGATION only occurs in the Federal Register.

Operate prior to that date at your peril.

Morsemen have always self-defined themselves with 20/15 hindsight. In fact, "Captain Arithmetic" seems to do little but look behind himself to the past.

"Coveted Extra level?" I've never looked at that hobby
"title" as anything to covet. As for coveting TITLES, there's plenty of fraternal orders I can think of with fancier TITLES (plus costumes) one can "enjoy" with as much cameraderie. No technical skill needed but still with the same hazing that old-timers seem to think necessary. :-)

>Morse remains an option up here in Canada, for testing and >qualification for HF-band access. Either pass the Morse test, or >score an extra 10% above the pass mark on the written exam, and you're >on the air on HF. An interesting compromise!

I find that most interesting considering our nations' pasts and traditions. Canadian leaders are somewhat rejecting their past reliance on English traditions and looking towards the future but not hesitant to use compromises to bind old and new. Compromise isn't (generally) considered a bad word up there. On the other hand, Americans who once fought wars (two) to get away from English rule, have become as covetous of TITLES as any European. The independence of thought has become a pejorative down here and one MUST "follow the party
(as in old royalty) line."

Operating any transmitter on HF takes no real skill nor is any formal training involved with long periods of practice. I first operated on HF 54 years ago come February...with a couple hours of informal instruction.
No license required, no hazing prior to operation, just do it as instructed. All the bitter recriminatory arguing in here by the morsers is in the POLITICS of AUTHORIZTION by a nation's ruling body. Morsers have always confused authorization with 'qualification' but that 'confusion' is only on the surface. They have been deliberately mis-using words carrying some emotional baggage in order to belittle the NCTA. [consider them
"closet hypocrites"]

I am in favor of Industry Canada's compromise in regards to morse code testing. It should satisfy both the oldetyme morser's "my way or the highway" mentality and the realism of today with a look to the future. A problem down here is the outright beligerance of some of the US
morsemen adamantly INSISTING on keeping the old standards and practices (with all old traditions and regulations absolutely intact regardless of their quaint archaic nature.

What I find amusing is the hypocrisy of "old" versus "old." The beligerant morsers decry my "age" as being unmeaningful and something to be discarded. Yet, those same insistent beligerants want to steadfastly KEEP the standards and practices in federal regulations that are as old (and some older) than I am! :-)

Oh...heck, Leo, now you've spoiled the ending for me!

Now I have to write a memo and cancel "DaVinci's Inquest"
[a good Canadian production in my opinion...but lacked the afterburner-on effort of PR necessary to be a network hit down here...a thank-you to my cable service for running it on an independent channel!]

With our without our FCC finally bothering with amateur radio regulation modernization, I'm not champing at the bit (or slobbering in my 'rocking chair' in front of my 'green screen' terminal) to get an amateur radio hobby license. Maybe I will, maybe I won't. Don't need a "title" to put in front or behind my name (as if it were some 'royal' thing or Nobel-quality honorific).

Maybe I'll spend some time in Las Vegas at the CSI Lab, to check out (forensically) "who dunnit." More fun
there outside of the lab. "Life's a gamble," isn't it?
Anyway, it's no "mystery" at all. The FCC announced it is going to do it down here. They aren't "O.J." :-)

Cordially,

My take is that the morsemen in here have some of the thinest skin of all humankind. Not just Miccolis, but Heil, Kelly, Wince Ficus (aka "Slow Code"), and a host of other old-style morsemen, some of whom have gone beyond to that great code room "up above."

Add to that a large measure of smug arrogance in older days...days when they felt that morse code testing would "never" go away...and morse code skill is the epitome, the most important skill any amateur could have...and the morsemen RULE hamdom.

I have to agree with you on the extreme pettiness Miccolis has exhibited. In trying to salve his personal word wounds (received in opinion "battle")
he goes to extremes in petty-pointing EXACT WORDS on quotes with DEMANDS that all his challengers bring back old, old areguments to "prove" he never said what he said. The rationales are over the top.

The pettiness gets over the top when he INSISTS on arguing subjects that are almost 8 years old (such as my Reply to Comments on NPRM 98-143 which the FCC marked as received in January 1999). It is over the top when he implies my moral-ethical 'wrongness'
on not "carrying out my 'promise' to go for extra-out-of-the-box in 2000." His world doesn't allow anyone to change their mind...EVER! :-(

However, to even remotely disagree with these Mighty Macho Morsemen is to invoke much wasted bandwidth of beligerant, accusatory "charges" of impropriety and "wrongness" of a personal nature, all of which are designed and manufactured to belittle, demean, and generally say nasty to all NCTAs. Who needs that? Is that what US amateur radio is "all about?" Fuggem I say.

Nothing from FCC in today's Federal Register (Vol 72, Number 3).

Which means the new rules will not go into effect before February 4, 2007.

Actually I don't think they publish on the week ends so that pushes it out at least two additional days for the earliest effectivity date.

Laws are only words on paper unless we as humans choose to abide by them. Enforcement occurs when those that choose to live by the laws get tired of and out number those that don't.

In the mean time, it isn't going to kill anyone to wait the next six to eight weeks before the implementation date. BTW, it didn't kill me to wait until 11:01 PM CST December 14, 2006 to operate on the expanded 80m Extra phone band.

Normal bureaucratic lack of speed. It will probably show up in the Federal Register around January 19th based on the past.

Kevin Alfred Strom: A rather boring NAZI who could speak for hours on 75m in praise of the KKK. He is a coward who lives in perpetual fear of the Southern Poverty Law Center and knows (or thought he knew) which lines he cannot cross to release their ire. But somebody found a skeleton in his closet.

...turns out he likes little girls.

Looks like something else, in addition to white sheets and tin foil hats turns him on. Have a good prison term, Kev.

In what way are the two connected? Besides the fact that the Waco armor. BTW, the whackos started the fires.

Strom's website is just plain weird, like the guy himself.

Jan. 4, 2007 - A leader of the white supremacist movement was arraigned today on charges of possession of child pornography and witness tampering after being arrested by FBI agents Thursday night at his home in Charlottesville, Va.

Kevin Alfred Strom, founder of the National Vanguard white supremacist group, was considered the leading intellectual of the movement since the death of William Pierce, the author of the notorious "Turner Diaires."

Strom was arraigned in U.S. District Court in Charlottesville, charged with the two counts, and is currently being held at a facility in the city. According to the indictment, he allegedly possessed or attempted to possess "multiple images of child pornography" on his computer's hard drive. Strom was also charged with witness tampering, which involved physically assaulting and mentally intimidating a witness to his criminal activity.

Last July, Strom took a leave of absence from National Vanguard, citing "family and health matters" and saying that he had "made mistakes, sometimes serious ones," according to the Southern Poverty Law Center, which tracks white supremacist activity. "After the death of Pierce, Kevin positioned himself to take over the leadership of the National Alliance," says Mark Potok, the editor of the SPLC's "Intelligence Report." "But he wasn't in the same position as Pierce and he didn't get the same respect. He was a wannabe and he was considered something of a wimp by other supremacists."

Strom wrote frequently about art and beauty, often rhapsodizing about the physical attributes of white women and girls. In an 2003 essay titled "Millstone for the Mogul" for the National Alliance's Web site, he condemned the producers of the movie "Thirteen" for "what they are doing to our little children - teen and preteen White children - to normalize perverse and degenerate sexual behavior for them, to normalize homosexuality, to prematurely sexualize them, and to make interracial sex fashionable to them - can never be forgiven, can never be explained away. The media moguls who are doing this to our children deserve to be tried and punished for conspiracy, rape, gang rape, murder and attempted murder."

The delay is purely administrative requirements (rules can't legally take effect, except in the most extraordinary, emergency cases, without due notice in the Federal Register.

There is always a backlog of things waiting to be published in the F.R.

That is all.

Now that is just darn handy, finding some porn on his computer, isn't it? Makes one wonder in such high profile cases ...

And no, I don't think those women and children in Waco Texas deserved to die ... I do think clinton and reno should have spent prison terms for playing such a major role in their deaths--if for no other reason than just plain negligence, that seems obvious enough to me.

Here's an interesting, but short-term, lmited lifetime idea for you folks who want to promote code learning.

The Lehigh Valley Amateur Radio Club has ammassed $100.00 to present as an award to the last club member to pass Element 1 for an upgrade at a club-sponsored ARRL VE session before the new rules come into effect and the Element 1 test moves out of the rule book and into the history books.

(Actually, it was announced last week at this month's club meeting that "several benefactors" had contributed a total of $70.00 to the cause and I just had to immediately kick in an additional $30.00 on behalf of NCI to make it an even hundred :-)

As I said, this is a short-term (limited lifetime) opportunity. If you want to continue to promote code learning, great, but you'll have to come up with a new idea ...

K-K-Kevin has spent year after year telling anyone who will listen that blacks are inferior, they are dirty, they are evil. His attacks on Martin Luther King are all over the Internet.

Can you imagine how K-K-Kevin is going to explain his anti-black ravings to his new best friends Tyrone, Leroy, and Ahmed????????

Here are 10 ways to promote Morse Code. (The "you" in the following is aimed at the person who wants to promote the mode):

1) Use Morse Code on the air. For ragchewing, DXing, contesting, traffic handling, QRP, QRO, QRS, QRQ, whatever floats yer boat. If your favorite band is crowded, try another and/or get a sharper filter. If you contest, even a little, send in your logs, photos, soapbox comments, etc. Our presence on the air is essential - one of the reasons FCC took away so much of 80 is that they were convinced it wasn't being used. Our presence on the air is more important than ever.

2) Work on your Morse Code skills. Got a CP certificate?

But not just speed alone. Can you send and receive a message in standard form? Can you do it faster than someone on 'phone?
Can you do both "head copy" and write it down? How about copying on a mill? Ragchewing? Contesting? Being able to have a QSO at slow as well as fast speeds?

3) Find a local club that does Field Day and go out with them.
Particularly if they have little or no Morse Code activity on FD now.
Help with their Morse Code efforts however you can - operating, logging, setting up, tearing down, etc. FD is one way to actively demonstrate 21st Century Morse Code use. Talking to people about Morse isn't nearly so effective as showing them.

4) Set up a Morse Code demo at a local hamfest/club meeting/air show/town fair/middle school etc. Not as some sort of nostalgia thing but as a demonstration that Morse Code is alive and in use today.

5) Conduct training classes - on the air, in person, over the 'net, whatever. Help anybody who wants to learn. Could be as simple as giving them some code tapes or CDs, or as involved as a formal course at a local community center.

6) Elmer anybody who wants help - even if they're not interested in Morse Code at all. Your help and example may inspire them.

7) Write articles for QST/CQ/Worldradio/K9YA Telegraph/Electric Radio/your local hamclub newsletter etc. Not about the code test nor about Morse Code history, the past, etc., but about how to use Morse Code today. For example, how about an article on what rigs are best for Morse Code use, and why? Or about the differences between a bug, single-lever keyer, iambic A and iambic B? Your FD experiences with Morse Code? (QST, June, 1994) Yes, you may be turned down by the first mag you submit it to - but keep submitting.

8) Get involved in NTS, QMN, ARES, whatever, and use Morse Code there. The main reason so much emergency/public service stuff is done on voice is because they don't have the people - skilled operators - to use any other mode.

9) Join FISTS & SKCC and any other group that supports Morse. Give out numbers to those who ask for them even if you're not a contester/award collector.

10) Forget about "the test". It will be gone soon and FCC won't bring it back. Yes, a lot of us think they made a bad decision, but that's nothing new, just look at BPL or their rulings on the sale of broadcast radio stations.

FCC won't preserve our standards and values - we have to do it.

And our attitude is a key part of that (pun intended). If we're seen as a bunch of old grumpy gus types, not many will want to join us. But if we present ourselves as a fun-loving, welcoming, young-at-heart-and-mind, helpful group with useful skills, similar people will want to join us.

IMHO

Ahhh yes, the old "Wolf In Sheeps Clothing" ploy!!!

Well, sad thing, but I don't think anyone expected 'ya to come up with anything original ... heck, maybe on the umpteenth try it'll work!

Jim, you've got your work cut out for you. Don't want to hear excuses about how hard it will be or that you already walked 5 miles uphill both ways to school in the snow and don't want to put out the effort...

Consider it, ummm, character building.

What Miccolis came up with is NOT original. :-(It's a standard boilerplate kind of "enthusiasm" which is spouted by all olde-tymers in response to changes in any organization. He seems to think that everyone "coming in" to amateur radio knows exactly nothing about the REAL attitude of the olde-tymers. Seldom true.

"Similar people" will turn out to be xerocopies of themselves, replete with eyeshades, sleeve garters, and "thousand yard stare" as they concentrate on incoming beeps. Those trying morsemanship will generally put aside the novelty of it rather quickly, finding out that the "fun" wasn't really fun after all.

What is unfortunate (for pro-coders) is there smug arrogance of the past and all they've said about those who don't love, honor, and obey morsemanship. PEOPLE remember what these "light-hearted, fun-loving, welcoming" pro-coders were like in the very recent past. [Google provides, BTW]

What will be interesting to watch is the "new" attitude of the ARRL, the national organization of the Archaic Radiotelegraphy Society (ARS). :-)

And you know the best part about it????

Kevin is broke. His bulldyke wife is broke. He was tossed out of the National Alliance. He formed the "National Vanguard" -- which is broke. His friends, such as they are, are all broke losers.

This is a federal charge, he's in a local lockup in Charlottesville, VA
-- that's likely overcrowded and filled with the same people Kevin likes to hate. His bail is likely to be $100,000 or more.

No one can go his bail -- so -- he'll sit in jail until his trial, which could be months unless he works out a plea agreement.

Oh, wait a minute -- you think he'll be able to sit?????????????

BWWWAAAAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAAAAAAAA!!!!!!

Strangely enough, when I was 32, a little girl pulled herself up on the barstool next to me and asked me to buy her a drink. I offered her my opinion that she was not old enough to drink. She said, "I am too old enough to drink - I'm 16." This was New Orleans 36 years ago when the legal drinking age was 16 and the age of consent in Louisiana was 12. It was perfectly legal so don't pretend to be so shocked. :-)

Later, a Louisiana female politician introduced a bill to raise the age of consent to 18. One of the male politicians tried to attach an amendment to make consent mandatory at age 18. That's a true story.

The state of Louisiana didn't object when Jerry Lee Lewis married his 13 year old second cousin in the late 1950's.
It was the British who objected.

Actually, without skill in morse, you simply will not be able to participate in QSO's with a large subset of the stations you listed. A lot of good DX (and QRP etc.) is only available in Morse (sometimes only in the extra class sections). I don't think the financial incentive Carl mentions is very relevant (or humorous for that matter). If you learn morse, you will be empowered to communicate with more people. If you don't know Morse, well, trying to find good DX will be similar to visitng Miami and not be able to speak Spanish...you can get by but will miss a lot. Too bad, Audios es 73

Agreed, but the point is that will only be true if skilled amateurs continue to actually use Morse Code.

WK3C and I go way back. We disagree on some things but agree on many more things.
That he completed the financial backing is very funny to me.

Yup - but only if radio amateurs continue to use the mode.

Some folks aren't interested in DX. But the same principle applies:
those who don't use Morse Code will be missing a lot.

no it is I believe a reference to the obvious inability of the proCoders to promote thier mode with the gulag system we currently have in place

or simply a reference to the fact that the world is changing, Morse Code will soon no longer be king of the modes

Actually, that is outrageous.

With any decent code reader software and the audio of your rig into the line in of your sound card in your computer, you can copy and send CW much, MUCH faster, concisely and intelligibly than any "CW Freak" out there ... you can send CW so fast, they only WISH they could copy it!

In all honesty? I don't forsee your moderated group going far. What "moderated" means to many of us is that the group is censored. Censoring a group, and allowing or not allowing comments at the whim or mood of an administrator is hardly appealing.
Paul may find it appealing, as you apparently do, too.
Good luck on your proposed little fifedom. Who, besides you and Paul, will wear the gold-encrusted crown bearing the lofty title of Moderator Supreme?
Which of you will use the golden sword of self-appointism to slash unwelcome comments?
And where does censorship, once begun, stop? Since there is to be no oversight, you and The Royal Court will have no checks and balances.

My prediction is that your moderated group will initially attract a few like-minded Hams, but will ultimately suffer from disinterest and boredom and fade into oblivion within a year at most.

The invention of the motorcycle did not make the bicycle obsolete. The invention of the car did not make walking obsolete. Power boats did not make all sailboats obsolete, although many sailboats were replaced by power boats.

People still run marathons, even though they'd go a lot faster with a lot less effort if roller skates were used.

AM did not become obsolete when SSB was invented. Morse Code did not become obsolete when voice and RTTY were invented.

--

Except for a few people who learned Morse Code elsewhere, most would-be hams don't have any prior Morse Code skill.

The code test acts as a sort of Great Equalizer, because almost everyone
starts out as a clueless newbie with the mode.

Morse Code cannot be learned by simply reading a book, visiting some websites or picking up a little bit here and there. A newcomer cannot cut-and-paste his/her way to a new skill, or rely on past achievements or claims to get around it.

It's a skill that is easily measured and cannot be faked. And it puts a Final Authority wannabe on the same footing as a Young Squirt.

It may be precisely this equalizing effect that makes some folks want to get rid of it.

The qrz.com groups, including the Q&A group, is moderated.
They have been pretty successful. There are presently 108 topics in the Q&A section many with 30+ replies.

from: http://vnnforum.com/showpost.php?p=480505&postcount=15

"In October of 05 we were driving to Arizona for the NV Eurofest and Elisha called me on our cell phone. She was screaming hysterically and wanted me to relay a message to Kevin that "the phone had been shut off" and that " he didnt pay the damn phone bill". She also stated that she "wouldnt be here when he gets back, he always goes on these trips without me etc..." when we got to Phoenix we told Kevin and later he explained that the phone was not shut off,it just was not connected properly and so the connection was on and off and that he could explain to her how to fix it if she would call him.

A few months later when the Colorado and Florida guys were complaining about Kevin's lack of ability to get things out on time I mentioned to a fellow member that "maybe Kevin and Elisha are having marital troubles and that is effecting his work". I had long suspected that she had been deleting my messages from their answering machine and from his email and my articles from the National Vanguard submission account.
Kevin confirmed months later that she had access to all of this and that might have been where the articles or messages that I sent ended up. Anyway, this fellow member told another fellow member who in a "genious" move posted that info on the internet like it was fact.
Elisha hit the ceiling. I called to appologize but she wouldn't hear of it. I tried to appologize again in May at the NJ conference but she said " April, get away from me, I dont want to cause a scene here today". After all the scandelous lies that have been written about me, I thought she was overreacting, especially since my appology was sincere and since it was only stated out of concern for them and for our organization.

Then in March of last year Kevin called me and told me that Elisha had attacked him and slammed one of those big heavy old fashioned phones down on his head and he had to get 8 stitches. Also, he told me that she had destroyed several one of a kind Reviolo Oliver taped interviews in a fit of rage because they had his ex wife on them. He also then told me that she had found some porn on his computer and that is was of adult females but that she freaked out and called him a pervert. (as a wife I kindof can understand her being pissed) Then he told me that she had threatened to "get even" with him and that he was afraid that she would plant something on his computer since she had been openly calling him a "pervert, child molester" in front of their daughter (Elisha's biological daughter but Kevin's stepdaughter) At this point I told him that he should have reported her to the police for assaulting him and should tape the threats that she was making. He said that he wanted to " save our marriage" ....and that he had "caused her alot of pain when she saw that porn" and that he wanted to help her and that she was having some psychological self esteem problems at the time.

Now as a mother I have to ask. If this was true about Kevin and what she suspected, then why would she have continued to stay in the house with her daughter? And why was she hanging all over him at the NJ conference?? Also, why would he mention this to me in March then continue to have stuff on his computer???

The bad thing about these kinds of things is that even if a guy is innocent and is declared innocent in a court of law his reputation of forever ruined.

EMERGENCY CONTACT: Fuel cells enable backup power

BY MIRANDA VAGG/vaggm@gnnewspaper.com

Fuel cell technology provides efficient and clean energy.

The Fuel Cells for Emergency Communications program is a combination of efforts from the New York Power Authority and the New York State Police. The $434,000 program will be used to set up fuel cell technology enabling backup power at 22 public safety communications facilities, including one in Albion.

"These fuel cell installations will keep state communications on-line when they are often needed the most, during power outages and other emergency situations," said Timothy S. Carey, NYPA's president and chief executive officer in a statement released Thursday.

The implementation of hydrogen backup power for state communications facilities across New York will work to keep people informed during power failures.

The New York State Department of Transportation tower located in Albion is a communications tower utilized by both the State Police and DOT, said DOT Assistant Engineer Rich Lovelace.

The facility handles communications in Western New York and was disabled during the October snow emergency. The use of fuel cell backup power in the future would allow communications facilities to operate as normal in the event of a power outage.

"Part of it is they'll be able to generate electricity for the tower in the event of a power failure," Lovelace said.

The hydrogen fuel would be brought to the site in a container comparable to a propane tank, which is then hooked into a unit on the energy transmitter, converting hydrogen into energy, according to Lovelace.

Currently New York State is also working on building a statewide wireless communications network so state workers don't have to depend on Verizon, Cingular or other wireless providers, according to Lovelace. The network would allow for open communication between crews that would otherwise not be available if communication towers are disabled and left without a backup energy supply.

"It's been in the works for a while," Lovelace said. "I think a lot of people are going to do this throughout the country. (Hurricane) Katrina was a pretty good lesson learned."

The fuel cell technology that would be used to power the communications tower is a clean energy technology, according to Carey.

"The Power Authority has undertaken more than a dozen fuel cell projects, in various types of applications using different fuel sources, to demonstrate reductions in air pollution and the advantages of distributed power supply," he said.

Unlike traditional technologies, which can be "unpredictable, expensive to maintain and harmful to the environment," the fuel cells offer backup power without damaging the environment through emission, Carey stated.

Funding for the FC4EC program will be provided from Petroleum Overcharge Restitution funds. The money comes from proceeds of court settlements relating to oil company violations of federal price controls in the 1970s and 1980s.

Actually, I believe that the main reason that most emergency/public service stuff is done using voice (or digital modes) is that they're faster and more convenient to use in a "tactical" situation.

Presenting CW as "something fun" is fine (as long as the presentee is allowed to decide for him/her self whether it's really fun or not :-)

Presenting it as a "standard" or "value" (implying that without CW you're as Larry and others used to say "not a REAL ham" is not the way.

Those who like CW should take comfort ... by all reports, in most of the other countries that have eliminated the CW requirement, MORE people are learning it now that before - folks may choose to do something if it's presented right and their choice, but tend not to like having things forced upon them.

The implication above that everything about ham radio except Morse is "cut-and-paste" is also absurd.

I was talking night before last with Ed Hare - remember the 3 page study guide that he had for his novice test and compare that, as he does, to the 200+ pages of "Now You're Talking" - there has been NO "dumbing down" for entry into ham radio. How anyone could assert with honesty and a straight face that 200+ pages of material is "dumbed down" compared to 3 pages is something that simply is unfathomable.

I think it's time to stop trying to attribute mythical powers to the soon to be history Morse test. To continue only perpetuates the falsehood that Morse skill is essential to being a good ham, capable of contributing, etc.

Have fun with Morse and promote it in a kind and polite way if you wish, but please lose the attitude that Morse somehow is the measure of a "REAL ham."

I often sit here and wonder just how much is real, and how much is memorex?

Man has always pressed machines into service, to do his work. I hardly see where it will be any different here.

No human can send/read cw as fast as a computer. No human can dig out the low level signals, both rf and af, as computer software can. I am sure many contests will ban cw reading software in the future ...

I am in agreement that CW will be with us for a bit longer, however, it will be done via keyboard with ever and ever increasing statistics and importance.

The "new guys" (the old farts needing to catch up too) will need some of this software/hardware to decode/key cw, it will be an "equalizer." The OT's will have ever increasing difficulty in differing between what is real (hand keyed) and what is computer keyed.

Here are some links for those behind, I picked these because there are very basic utilities and hardware "kludges" to get one going quickly--there is much better software available these days ...

I suggest an opto-isolator circuit used between sound card out and xmitter to key.

I won't go near moderated newsgroups, but on the other hand, it's hardly "censorship" when they are created in response to all kinds of junk in a newsgroup that is there because people have no sense of self-control.

There is ultimately a big difference between saying what you want to say, and saying what you want to say even if it has no relevance to the topic at hand. It's the latter that have damaged this newsgroup (with overflow to some of the other newsgroups).

I would point out that while I basically try to tune it out, it would seem there are attempts at "censorship" here, in the spews by a few people who just think by repeated postings attacking other posters they can get their way.

People who don't like others imposing rules have to accept some responsibility in helping to ensure that any space is still a valid

Putting most of the nitwits in your killfile accomplishes the same thing, and when you do this, this newsgroup is amazingly quiet.

Gentlemen can agree to disagree without the personal attacks and name-calling. Unfortunately, the hate that has rotted the minds of a few tends to carry forth into public forums.

Interesting. Debate and argument is the spice of life. It is necessary in our gov't, business and homes--just to keep things running!

While often we tend to think it is desirable to live in the world without difference of opinions and ideas, such a world quickly becomes dusty, moldy, brittle and unsatisfying.

Probably the most important function(s) colleges teach are all centered around argument and debate.

Filth and perversion can always be "moderated out" without loss of relevant info and dialog.

Using moderation to halt debate and argument is just a "Morons Filter."

And, off topic? A bit keeps it interesting ... if faced with too much--that IS what the killfile is for ...

Well said!

As one who got carried away on occasion in the past (and has repented and changed), I would urge folks to clean up this newsgroup.

As pointed out above, putting the flamers in your killfile will clean it up (as it appears to you, at least, and MAY result in them getting tired of the lack of attention and going away. (remember the message a day or so ago without

Let me clarify:

The BPL comparison is made simply to point out that just because FCC decides something doesn't make it "right" or the best thing. That's the only point I was trying to make. Perhaps there's a better analogy for when govt.
decides something that a sizable part of the population doesn't want.

> I support the ARRL's actions against > BPL and encourage all hams to do so.

Same here!

> I contributed $1k to the Spectrum

You've done a lot more than that in the BPL situation, Carl.

You not only contributed money. You went to at least one operating BPL site
(you may have done more than one, I'm not sure) and made observations

and documented them. You used both your professional and amateur expetise/experience to present those documented observations in comments to FCC about the reality of harmful interference from BPL. Very good stuff all around.

> > FCC won't preserve our standards and values - we have to do it.

Of course. Some people find Morse Code to be fun, others not. Some find the technology end of ham radio to be fun, others not.

> Presenting it as a "standard" or "value" (implying that without CW you're as > Larry and others used to say "not a REAL ham" is not the way.

I've never written that someone isn't "a real ham" without Morse Code skill.
Nor have I implied it - ever. Of course some might infer what wasn't implied...;-)

What makes a person "a real ham" is much more complex than any single skill or knowledge set.

My whole point in the above is that if someone considers Morse Code
skill
- or any other skill or knowledge - to be part of the standards or values of Amateur Radio, then it's up to them to promote said standards and values, by example, rather than expecting FCC to do it in the form of regulations, tests,
etc. And that's all I was trying to say.

It would turn out to be the ultimate irony in the whole debate if Morse Code
test elimination wound up making the mode even more popular than it is today!

A fascinating piece of gear! IIRC, it does a bunch of other modes, too.

Of course it needs to be hooked to a computer, too. Not too many years ago having a shack computer would have been a big investment, but now the SCS unit probably costs more than the computer it's hooked up to.

How much are current PACTOR2 capable boxes going for, anyway?

As for hearing signals you can't - that's really a matter of having more filtering
and a better detector.

As for speed - well, consider this:

You could almost certainly win the Tour de France and set world-record times for each leg - if they'd let you ride your Harley to do it....;-)

Thanks for the kind words ... I wasn't looking for "kudos" ... just trying

That's a problem ... the fact that those boxes are proprietary means that the manufacturer can charge more than they ought to cost ...

I think that Cecil's point was that there is no detector that can be used to detect Morse by ear that can compete with a near optimum system that uses digital modulations, FEC, etc.

Your quotes around "censorship" indicate that you understand that only the government can truly censor anything. Changes made by the moderators of a posting group might more accurately be called editing, as letters to the editor are rejected or edited by an editor who is employed by the owners of a newspaper.

The moderators of qrz.com have, from time to time, suggested that I edit my own postings. :-) With freedom (of speech) comes responsibility. I forget

What is the difference between a PTC2e and better digital filters with better detectors? What is the difference between the DSP processors in my IC-756PRO and the DSP processors in the PTC2e? Electronics is electronics.
To be consistent, the same people who frown on PTC2e

April Gaede is the girls' mother. She allowed her daughters to pose Resistance is published by the National Alliance, where Strom was second-in-command under Pierce for a long time. I believe it's no wonder that he's facing the particular charges he is right now.

Especially considering what he had on his website in the past (photos of young girls, about 12, in bikinis, and in suggestive poses).

Agreed - but there's another issue, which I'd like to read your comments on.

If I understand the meaning of Part 97 rules on amateur use of digital modes,
we're allowed to use almost anything we can come up with as long as the FCC specified bandwidth/shift/rate criteria aren't exceeded, and the mode is "documented".

The "specified bandwidth/shift/rate criteria" in PArt 97 needs work, IMHO, but that's not the issue I'm after right now.

What I wonder about is the "documentation" part.

If a ham wanted to start from scratch and design/build/operate a "modem" (hardware, software, or some combination) for Baudot RTTY, PSK31, Morse Code, AX.25 packet, or many other modes, the first step would be to get a copy of how the encoding is done. For the modes I mentioned, and many others, that encoding is easily available.
Any ham who wants to can design/build/operate such a device, as long as they have the know-how and are willing to make the investment of time and money. I remember seeing the first amateur non-mechanical RTTY keyboard in ham magazines almost 40 years ago - they were designed from the specification for 60 wpm Baudot RTTY.

But where is the specification for PACTOR2 easily available? Doesn't the proprietary nature of the modems violate Part 97?

> > How much are current PACTOR2 capable boxes going for, anyway?

Last time I looked - $600

That all depends on the definitions.

There are conditions where Morse Code is perfectly usable but some digital modes
are rendered useless by things like phase distortion.

If you use a receiving system that is not optimized for the mode, such as using an SSB filter when listening to Morse Code, SNR suffers. The SCS modem is optimized for the mode, while Cecil's rx may not be optimized for Morse Code.

Well, Cecil might. It depends on the race, the riders - and the motorcycles. Replace the Harley with a lesser motorcycle and the bicyclists could certainly win!

> ... your point is? :-)

Simply that inventions don't necessarily replace people, skills, or earlier inventions.

And that the journey can be as important as the destination. Otherwise there would be very few motorcycles.

In response to the news that a U.S. Citizen has been charged with a crime, some respondents have published lurid posts which assume that all of the following are true:

1. Vigilante justice is OK when carried out against neo-nazis.
2. Men named "Ahmed", "Tyrone", or "Leroy" are disposed to commit homosexual rape.
3. Homosexual rape is a just and acceptable side-affect of being arrested.

It seems to me that Mr. Strom isn't the only one who has shown prejudice: the question of whether his overt racism is more dangerous than some others' preconceived notions is left as an exercise for the reader.

Especially given my 68 year old ears with holes in my hearing from too many Colt .45 blasts.

CW has always required some assistance from the electronics, the encoding of switch closures into RF pulses and the decoding of RF pulses into audio bursts. What does it matter if a few more pieces of electronics are used for encoding and decoding?

How is the electronic detector that changes RF to audio characters all that different from a device that changes RF to visible characters on a display?
What is the real difference from a human brain translating an audio dit-dah onto the letter 'A' and simply seeing the letter
'A' displayed on a screen? It is only a matter of time until CW receptions can be translated into voice simulations just as ASCII files can be translated today. In fact, I could easily accomplish that feat in my spare time.

How soon we forget. Here's a quote from a late 19th century symposium on the age of consent for the various states in the USA. Strom seems to have been born a century too late.

"The age of consent varies from ten years to eighteen, being the latter only in Kansas and Wyoming. The limit is ten years in three States, twelve years in four, thirteen years in three, fourteen years in nineteen, fifteen years in one, sixteen years in twelve, seventeen years in one, and eighteen years in two."

Maybe.

Or maybe just the opposite happens.

Perhaps someone finds a way to reduce the price without reducing the performance. With capitalism at work, that person sells a lot more devices, because many of those not willing to pay the price for an SCS box are willing to pay a lower price for something similar.

And it may be those who were willing to pay the SCS box price who are buried in the sands of time.

What is the real difference between a motorcycle and a small automobile?
Both require an engine, transmission, wheels, tires, and various mechanical components. Both are simply powered roadway vehicles. Automobiles tend to be safer, more reliable, less weather-dependent, and to require less skill. Autos
are also more comfortable and offer far more features.

Why should anyone think that riding a Harley is better - or that much different - than driving a Honda?

Responsibility yes. But, I am sure there are as many definitions of freedom of speech as there are mindsets.

I should think that what should be meant by this "responsibility" is that one never uses his/her right of that freedom to infringe upon others. I think it further implies that one defend it as those before he/she did to insure its' availability to all others. I think that for one to claim title and use of "freedom of speech" he or she must be above the evil temptation of censorship and "editing" to fit ones own purpose.

Thankfully, evil individuals and groups are rather easy to identify, they usually can be known from their deeds, endeavors and willingness to grant to others, what they so rightfully claim inheritance to.

I should think there is also a responsibility to use that freedom to chase out falsehoods and self serving individuals who attempt to subdue it to their evil purposes. Indeed, a very hideous example of this is in how some have changed "free speech" into "politically correct." I am sure the forefathers are turning in their graves over that perversion of what is meant for good--turned to evil.

I have heard a few good and noble men state, in rather few words, what the true intent and meaning of "free speech" is. I don't remember their words verbatim, however, I can give enough so one can get the gist of their meaning and intents, as follows:

"Although I may disagree with you on one or more accounts--or even all your points, I will, with my life--if necessary, defend your right to say it."

Since mankinds birth and surely until his kinds death, I doubt we shall ever see a better definition ...

Humble regards,
JS

Not at all.

IMHO, that's a rather shortsighted view. Consider this statement:

ALL that a written test does is indicate that you can pick out at least the minimum required number of correct multiple-choice answers in a test where all of the questions and answers are freely available beforehand.

Nothing more, nothing less.

In addition, as long as you don't cheat, FCC does not care how you get the right answers, nor which questions you get right or wrong.
They don't care if you memorized, or if you guessed, or if you really understand the material. They also don't care if you have a Ph.D in EE, etc. - you get the same test.

Note that FCC eliminated the multiple-choice Morse Code test option, leaving only the one-minute-solid-copy and fill-in-the-blanks options.

I intended no such implication - because it would be absurd.

The point I was making is that passing the written tests is/was a very different thing from passing the Morse Code tests, particularly if someone had some background in electricity or electronics. Which is much more likely today than someone having background in Morse Code.

The written exams, particularly Element 2, do not begin to cover
"everything about ham radio except Morse". Nor do they cover any subject in much depth, IMHO.

In my experience, most people can accumulate a lot of "book learning" type knowledge by "here and there" methods. Skills like Morse Code usually cannot be learned that way. Whether that's good or bad is a matter
of opinion.

I have debunked W1RFI's "200 page" myth several times - including in person.
I wish you'd been there for that one, Carl.

Comparing the "Now You're Talking" book to the Novice study guide in old LMs is comparing apples and oranges. Here's why:

1) The LM study guide mentioned was for the old 1year nonrenewable Novice license. Today's Now You're Talking (NYT) is for the Technician, which conveys
many more privileges.

2) The LM study guide wasn't complete - one also had to study the regulations,
which were in the back of the book.

3) The LM study guides were in the form of essay questions and answers.

The NYT book gives the exact Q&A used in the exams.

4) Just one of the old LM questions could generate a whole raft of possible
multiple choice exam questions. NYT gives the exact Q&A.

5) The old LMs weren't meant to be a stand-alone introduction to amateur radio. They were simply intended as a guide to what was on the exams, and the procedures to get a license. In truth they weren't even complete, because they did not cover how to learn Morse Code. (ARRL sold another fifty-cent book for that). NYT is meant as a complete introduction. It would be fairer to compare NYT with a set of the old ARRL intro books (the LM, "How To Become A Radio Amateur", "Learning the RadioTelegraph
Code" and possibly "Understanding Amateur Radio).

6) The old Novice was a one-year one-time nonrenewable license. The Technician isn't.
Try comparing the content of some of the questions - and not just for the old Novice.

Nobody really knows how "hard" the old exams really were, because they're not available for comparison.

I will repost some study questions from the old License Manual - they're the best we've got.

It's one tool in the toolbox. That's all. A very useful tool, though.

Please point out where I have ever written that one must have Morse Code skill
to be "a real ham".

The "equalizer" idea is simply to point out that almost all hams who try to learn it start at the same place. That's not true of the written exams.

-OR-
b) A guy who can send morse really well?

I am sure you can find a much better argument than your current one ...

Study Question #31:
Draw a schematic diagram of a circuit having the following components:
(a) battery with internal resistance, (b) resistive load, (c) voltmeter,
(d) ammeter.

Study Question #32:
>From the values indicated by the meters in the above circuit, how can the value of the resistive load be determined? How can the power consumed
by the load be determined?

Study Question #33:
In the above circuit, what must the value of the resistive load be in order for the maximum power to be delivered from the battery?

Study Question #34:
Draw the schematic diagram of an RF power amplifier circuit having the following components: (a) triode vacuum tube, (b) pi-network output tank, (c)
high voltage source, (d) plate-current meter, (e) plate-voltage meter, (f) rf chokes, (g) bypass capacitors, coupling capacitor.

Study Question #35:
What is the proper tune-up procedure for the above circuit?

These are just a sample. They're not the exact questions that were on the old exams.

The actual exam was multiple choice, and would show a schematic of the amplifier circuit - close, but not exactly like the one shown inthe
license
manual - and had 5 of the components labelled "a" thru "e". The question would be something like, "which is the coupling capacitor?" "which is an rf chokes?"
"what is the function of the capacitor labelled ''d' in the circuit above?"

How they compare to the current exams is a matter of opinion. IMHO the old exams covered fewer subjects but covered them in much more detail.

These weren't study questions for the Extra written test.

Nor were they study questions for the Advanced written test.

Nor were they study questions for the Technician/General written test.

They were for the 1976 Novice written exam.

Still handy, those voltmeters and ampmeters: I*E = W, I = E/R, etc. I can't imagine the FCC dropping those!

Of course those tests have changed, who can solder smc components on the micro-minaturized "new equipment." And, even getting parts is becoming difficult to build your own equipment.

Mostly, hardware will be purchased from here on out. You will upgrade your rig with new software (firmware), the exams will eventually have to pose questions on computer programming! You computer will just hold a couple of more boards--a receiver and xmitter plugged into the bus ...

Mostly, now you are arguing keeping irrelevant questions for those who will have to deal with current technology--all you propose as a new argument, as opposed to your old argument, is another based on insane logic and reasoning?

The point is that it is that both different from crawling on one's all-fours. Most of us homo sapiens started by crawling, then learned to walk and then learned to run. Most of us hams started with Morse code and then learned to talk and then to use PACTOR2. :-)

However, in the wider view of ALL world radio, manual morse code radiotelegraphy HAS become obsolete. The ONLY radio service using it for (alleged) communications is the ARS (Archaic Radiotelegraphy Society).

Soon-to-be-legal R&O 06-178 is about the TEST, Carl. :-)

[in case you've forgotten...possibly since the NCI web site didn't appear to know it until after a week had passed after the FCC announcement...just a deduction]

Is there any earth-shaking regulation changes about morse code USE in FCC 06-178? I don't think so...

That exchange is rather worthless. Miccolis phrased his statement to imply that would-be hams "must" have morsemanship skill. Miccolis is good at such...:-)

If anyone wants to bother checking the numbers of NEW radio amateur licensees - other than via the AH0A pro-morse-uber-alles website - they would find that NEW ham licensees were coming via the no-code-test Tech class. By a ratio of five to one (give or take).

I have to call Miccolis' statement something different.
"Absurd" is too understated. It is bullshit fresh from the bovine enclave.

>> because almost

Not quite, Carl. Miccolis' implication is once again that morsemanship is the "true" measure of "ham."
The use of the label "clueless newbie" is the sneering
look-down-the-nose from the arrogance of superiority.

>> Morse Code cannot be learned by simply reading a

There's that wonderful implication again...all 'true' hams will want to learn morsemanship, that it MUST be learned. :-)

"Dumbed down" = Lack of morse code skill.

That's been how it has been used by the morseodists
in here. They equate intelligence with morsemanship.
Please don't expect them to use such "intelligence" in figuring out reality... :-(

Tsk, to reiterate, FCC 06-178 is about morse code TESTING, not its use.

Oh, you poor thing...you just CAN'T LET GO of that subject, can you? :-(

Actually, what I wrote in a Reply To Comments on NPRM
98-143 can be viewed in its entirety at the FCC website.

Instructions for anyone else:

Just go to www.fcc.gov and click on Search, then ECFS (Electronic Comment Filing System). Click on Search at the right again to get the standard form for searching.
In the upper right corner box enter 98-143. The ECFS will search ALL of the documents (many of them) and present a long list. To save time, just enter my name (Leonard H. Anderson) OR enter date 13 January 1999.
That will bring up my Reply to Comments (on Comments of "Michael P. Deignan, et al") in regards to the Notice of Proposed Rule Making 98-143. [note the "et al" following Mikey's name]

There are 14 pages in my Reply To Comments (page numbers at the bottom), preceded by my cover letter to the FCC, followed by an FCC notation (their page 16) that a "diskette was received" (the full electronic system was not yet in place for January 1999).

On Page 12 of 14 is my suggestion on age requirements which had its specific origin in the

ARRL Letter, Volume 17, Number 12, 20 March 1998.
In the middle of that reference (duly noted in a footnote on my Page 12) is a darling story entitled "Youngest Hams in the US?" The photo going with that story has two charming FOUR YEAR OLDS, clad in their Sunday finest, being hugged by a grandfatherly-looking VE.

To anyone who wants to see for themselves, all they need do is go to www.arrl.org, enter "youngest hams"
in the Search box, a short list will be presented,
then click on the Letter for 20 March 1998.

FOUR YEARS OLD! They supposedly "passed" their written test...with all the English language comprehension of FOUR YEARS OLD. Yeah, surrrre they did. The VEs "passed them" didn't they? :-(

FOUR YEARS OLD!

That was in 1998. That was NINE YEARS AGO...
come February or March of this year.

My Reply To Comments on 98-143 was dated as received on 13 January 1999. In a week from now that will be EIGHT YEARS AGO!

That SINGLE comment page has been the only one that garnered any comment...and that mostly the vilest bile that the pro-coders could conceive. But, the one with the continuing woodie on the subject is Miccolis, James. He can't stop on that.

One can find out why. My ARBITRARY age limit on my Reply To Comments was 14 years old (not exactly arbitrary, it is one year after Bar Mitzvah).
Surprise, surprise, Gomer! Miccolis got his first ham license at age 14!

Poor Jimmie, he done feel "personally insulted" somehow from the age similarity. He got 'wounded' in the Great Word War here. Tsk, tsk.

>Every so often, there's a mention of some youngster who earned an >amateur radio license at a very early age. One such news item caused >Len to claim here that there must have been some kind of fraud at the >VE session, because he somehow knew that the youngsters pictured could >not have passed the license tests honestly.

Damn straight, Gomer! Those CHILDREN were FOUR YEARS OLD. "Full English comprehension" to 4-year olds? NO WAY. "Fraud?" You betcha. What kindly grandfather could say no to such charming CHILDREN?

Yet those CHILDREN, having "passed" their license test and receiving confirmation from the FCC, would now be LEGALLY AUTHORIZED to transmit RF to anywhere in the world...ALL BY THEMSELVES. Legal. No problems.

FOUR YEAR OLDS. There's not one damn thing in Part 97 saying that "adult supervision is required." In 1998 or now in 2007.

Hay, no problemo wiz me, senior. I'll just consider that all legal US radio amateurs have the attitudes and aspirations and skills of FOUR YEAR OLDS. The ARRL proved it is okay...and we don't want to naysay the ARRL do we? [they know what is good for ham radio...]

Oh, by the way, the ARRL used the term "HOBBY" in that charming 1998 ARRL Letter. Gosh, its not the "national service" or "service to the nation" that all the fantasy livers want, is it? HOBBY. ARRL said so.

To Jimmie Miccolis: Put this OLD SUBJECT to rest, it's been warmed up in here twice before and everyone else has put it aside. Quit your transgender-wannabe Nun of the Above act and DROP IT. Bring it up again and all you will do is make others irritated. None of us care one whit WHY you have such a woodie for bringing back old, old, old subjects...but you consistently do that.

Now KMA, 4Q and the hearse you rode in on...

"batshit" that is sure is intelengent

OTOH indeed the National Socailists are valid type of polictical thought that was hijacked by the Hitler et al and preverted into something truely sick

Yeah. Imagine a high speed chase in the city, and the cop in the pursuing patrol car tapping out the street names with his key with one hand while he steers the car with the other hand. Or attempts to steer the car.

I think by now we should be happy because someone shows interest in ham radio at all, regardless of which modes of operation they're interested in.

I've never understood the 'socialist' part of National Socialist.. the Nazi party was about as far right as you could possibly get, and Hitler despised communism.

It's my understanding that it was the NVEC council who decided to eliminate the multiple choice option. This was for two reasons. One was to make the exam consistent no matter which VEC was responsible for the administering the program. Prior to that, some VECs used the multiple choice while others used the fill in the blank. The second reason was that now only 5wpm was needed for General and Extra, eliminating the multiple choice test would require that the applicant have a better grasp of the code rather than being a good guesser on the multiple choice. Part 97 only required that the applicant pass the test and did not define how that test was to be designed or administered.

National Socialism exercises control over the means of production while leaving the ownership in private hands.

Communism exercises control over the means of production
while claiming ownership of those means of production.

Capitalism leaves ownership and control of the means of production in private hands.

National Socialism and Communism are just two sides of the same socialist coin. They are more alike than they are different. If National Socialism and Communism are 180 degrees apart, then Capitalism is orthogonal to both of those socialist systems.

I have in front of me a Coleco Radio Amateur Question and Answer License guide from 1956, the "golden Age of Amateur Radio"

The booklet is a 6 by 8.5 inch paperback of 32 pages. It notes on the cover that it contains:
FCC-type Multiple Choice Questions
Typical FCC-Type Practice Exams
Questions Grouped by Subjects
Novice, Technician and General CLasses

Let us take a look at some of the questions.....

1. The Instrument used to measure resistance is:

a. wattmeter
b. ammeter
c. voltmeter
d. ohmmeter

2 The unit of power is:

a. the ampere
b. the coulomb
c. the watt
d. the joule

3. The third harmonic of 350 c.p.s. is:

a. 117 c.p.s.
b. 250 c.p.s.
c. 700 c.p.s.
d. 1050 c.p.s.

4. The instrument used to measure current is:

a. wattmeter
b. ammeter
c. voltmeter
d. ohmmeter

5. The frequency of a sine wave is:

a. the time in seconds for one cycle
b. the amplitude of the wave
c. the number of cycles per second
d. the angle of rotation

gawsh-awful simple stuff there.

Some are a little less elementary, but still not too bad...

17.The Q of a resonant circuit is the:

a. inductive reactance divided by the resistance
b. inductance divided by the resistance
c. circulating current divided by the capacitance
d. circulating current divided by the inductance

18. If a 6 henry choke is connected in series with a 12 henry choke, (with no mutual inductance between them) the total inductance is

a. 4 henries
b. 3 henries
c. 36 henries
d. 18 henries

Here is a formula...

20. The formula for the reactance of an inductor is: (in the form that can be handled by newsgroup text)

a. 2pi/fL
b. 1/2Pi*fL
c. 1/2*fL
d. 2Pi*fL/2

a couple more formulae, then back to some "cyphering"

22. What is the total resistance of one 10 ohm resistor and two 20 ohm resistors all connected in series

a. 50 ohms
b. 5 ohms
c. 30 ohms
d. 45 ohms

Okay, we move on to Vacuum tube questions. I'll not go too much into these, as I suspect most of us would agree that vacuum tubes aren't terribly relevant to getting a license these days...

28, The maximum safe heat radiation capability of the plate of a tube is indicated by the following rating:

a. transconductance expressed in mhos
b. maximum plate dissapation expressed in watts
c. plate resistance expressed in ohms
d. grid bias expressed in volts

okay - now we get to one of the dreaded "schematics"

30. Draw a schematic diagram of a pentode audio power amplifier stage with an output coupling transformer and load resistor, showing suitable instruments connected in the secondary for measurement of the audio frequency voltage and current; and name each component part.

analysis here:

Most of the components are named for us. The output transformer with a load resistor and a voltmeter and ammeter are no-brainers. Various things like the screen, grid, and cathode resistors are known even to a tube neophyte as myself. In truth, I didn't think of the bypass caps. I suppose I would have gotten this one wrong. But I suspect if I was taking the test in those days, I would have had more exposure to hollow state technology. Certainly I would get that one now if I were to take it a second time.

I don't feel like typing much more. Hopefully I've made my point. And if anyone missed it, my point is that the tests given in the so called "golden age" of Amateur radio were definitely NOT harder than the tests administered today. Of course those rascals from Coleco could have just been pulling our legs, making a booklet that was not relevent to the tests as they really were at that time. Kinda doubt that though.

So what really happened? My guess is that they only seemed harder to those who took them - at the time they took them. A lot of people are not very experienced when they are starting out - otherwise they wouldn't be starting out. Those tests might just seem plenty difficult to a real newbie.

So the newbie passes the test. Newbie learns a lot over the years, and eventually becomes an old timer. As an old timer, the ex newbie forgets that so much of their learning took place between those first tests, and what he/she eventually ended up with as a knowledge base. So the old time starts to think that all hams should be tested according to the old timer's knowledge level.

Or than again, maybe they just want to bitch.

(Sorry all, for the reasoned response - I realize that it doesn't belong in this group - heheh.

It is unfortunate that the PACTOR 2 and 3 are proprietary and yet have an established infrastructure that hams could use for e-mail (similar to/same as sailmail). I don't understand why hams let that happen. I was looking for a way to send email to family in the USA when I visit relatives on Siquijor Island in the Philippines (recently they did open up 1 internet cafe on the island about 12 Km from where I stay, operating at dial-up speeds, but I would rather just use my radio if I could). I came across ALE as a possible mode where I could just use a PC and a rigblaster but ALE is still very experimental with none of the established infrastructure that PACTOR 2/3 have. I think ALE and PACTOR may be technically illegal in the amateur bands due to their transmission protocols, not always listening for spectrum occupation before transmitting, on their extremely wide bandwidths.

Anyhow, being largely a seafaring nation, and a poor nation largely unable to afford modern rigs, code is still king in the Phils and you hear it all the time on 40m and 80m. Even on their cell phones, (which curiously they CAN afford), when they receive an SMS message, you hear the phones beeping di-di-dit dah-dah di-di-dit ("SMS", for those of you from 6 land ;-)) when they receive new messages. Due to cost, they use SMS much more often than voice. Every school child in the Philippines knows basic morse since so many of the kids end up going on to school for seafaring occupations. They did not pay any attention to the USA FCC's elimination of code requirements for navigation although I am sure that 50 years from now they will be up to our current US standards.

As Carl and the other techies know, for computer transmissions in real time QSO's, psk31 is an extremely simple and very narrow band mode that you can use directly to your rig from the sound card of your PC (it is highly recommend that you build a simple isolation circuit between PC and rig). In my opinion, psk31 is superior to code and will overtake computer CW in about 25 years after every 3rd world ham has access to a PC for non-productive hobby use (right now, many countries do not even have access to PC's in the primary schools yet). Assuming you have a few toroids and tranistors available at home or work, the cost is free. Interestingly, there is a small movement among psk31ers trying to make PACTOR illegal due to its huge bandwidth and what seems like malicious digital QRM when it wipes out every station in its path when it transmits without checking for existing band usage...if you have ever used psk31 and got smeared by PACTOR you would know what I mean. ALE and PACTOR should not be illegal of course, but they should have a dedicated portion of the AR spectrum limited for their usage where it could be a "primary" occupant and other modes are "secondary". The gentlemens' agreements in the band plans don't always help these days.

And I fear religious kooks like you.

Are you claiming Koresh was innocent? Even if he was before all the shit went down, after he and his deluded followers shot the feds, that ended any claim of being innocent. That his followers were too weak minded to save themselves is sad, but it was their choice. What exactly do you think the feds should have done, and how long should they have waited to finally go and end it?

It is hard to judge these things.

I once posted about something, and mentioned passing the test when I was 12, in 1972, and I got email from someone practically denouncing me, saying he knew the test was really difficult back then, which means
I couldn't have passed at such an early age.

It never seemed difficult to me back then. The code was harder, I failed the code reception test the first month and had to retake it the next month.
But the theory test required drawing a number of things, and I did okay.

Oddly, it's in retrospect that I realize didn't particularly know what I was doing, I didn't memorize answers and I was reading as many technical things as I could get my hands on, but later I did realize that I didn't know much back then.

Yet, I would say the test here in Canada must have gotten simpler, if for no other reason than that there was the restructuring in 1990 where the entry level license took away things that I was allowed to do when I passed the test, such as a full kilowatt and building anything I wanted.

I think you are serious...you think computer-generated/received CW is really some advanced technology of the new millenium and you got your first taste of it in 1996. Have you ever thought that that there were far more "advanced" digital modes, superior to and more efficinet than CW, as long as one decided to connect a PC to a radio? I personally ignore computer CW....CW is not meant for a computer nor will it ever be...it is a human mode that has a "body language" to it that computers are not good at reading. For computers, PSK31 is a very simple, far superior machine mode to computer CW in every way. If you said "PSK31, welcome to the new millenium" I could go along with that. But computer generated CW? Sort of like attaching a lawn mower engine to a bicycle and calling it a motorcycle, isn't it? But far be it from me to criticize your toys. ;-)

It's not true that the FCC eliminated the multi-choice code test, it was the NCVEC who did. It was a reaction by them against the FCC eliminating the 13 and 20 wpm tests.

Theoretically, I suppose they might react now that the 5 wpm test is being cut too by stiffening the theory tests in some way, although paradoxically they filed a petition in favour of this.

My guess is that these contradictory decisions were made by thin majorities.

That's true insofar as it goes, but code that is sent badly by hand is hard for any hardware or software to copy, other than the human brain, and code is easy to send badly by hand!!! For this reason many even send by computer and read by ear. I don't, I just don't use the mode atall, but those who indicate that machine reading has problems have a good point.

I just read a review of a 1957 Riuko that is still on the road. Granted, that's a copy of a Harley, but it was made in Japan. I didn't think Honda had entered the US market by 1957, but I'm sure there are still some '60s Honda motorcycles out there somewhere.

Myself, I owned a Suzuki, a Kawasaki and a couple of Yamahas, but no Hondas, Harleys or even Riukos.

ogg-vorbis? Do you use the same method for your speech packets? Do you use variable bit encoding? Are you aware that ogg-vorbis is open source

You have missed the whole point, does the above help clarify it for you?

According to what I've read, these dirndl-wearing cuties chose the name "Prussian Blue" in reference to their ethnc heritage and the color of their eyes. What's ironic is that Prussian blue, a pigment used in paints, is a cyanide compound.

I thought the Conditional exam seemed difficult in 1952
(except for the easy 13 wpm code) and flunked the Conditional written once when I was 14. 48 years later I aced the Extra with a grade of 100%. The extra written exam seemed very easy after a EE degree and 40 years of engineering experience. :-)
But in 2000, 20 wpm seemed difficult. Go figure.

Benevolent capitalism is not socialism. Ideally, the family capital is owned and controlled by the adults and benevolently shared with the children who should have little say in how the family capital is saved, invested, or spent. Families who practice socialism (equal rights and equal shares for children) are families in trouble.

The pilgrims tried socialism and almost starved to death.
Only when they converted to capitalism did they survive.
Socialism doesn't work because the lazy people don't work and the non-lazy people are cheated out of their return on investment - so why bother working?

Please don't blame capitalism for the existence of a breeding herd of welfare folk who believe the world owes them a living.
Socialism rewards failure - Surprise! More failures are breeding, more people are failing, and WE are paying for it. That's certainly not the fault of capitalism which is being squeezed out of existence by creeping socialism. Capitalism rewards success and penalizes failure. That's the opposite of what is happening today.

I saw a neat T-shirt the other day. Under a picture of Bill and Hillery appeared the words: Do Not Resuscitate!

Typical of people raised on governmental handouts, i.e. socialism at work. They have lived for generations under socialist handouts so they think your property belongs to them. That's the basic problem with socialism. Socialism says your life belongs to the state. Capitalism says your life belongs to you. Why are you choosing socialism, the very thing you are complaining about?

> One of my neighbors put up high a high iron fence, state of the art

Socialism rewards failure and punishes success. What do you expect?
Your successful neighbor is being punished. All of us successful folk are being punished. You are complaining about the fruits of present day creeping socialism and yearning for the past glory days of a more capitalistic society.

Uhhhh John, this nation has been getting less and less capitalistic and more and more socialistic for half a century or more. The "chicken in every pot" mentality is responsible. People raised under The New Deal, The Great Society, and Hillery's socialized health care concepts are demanding that you give up your chicken, exactly as was predictable from the start. Since you support socialism, why are you complaining about giving up your chicken?

I agree with this completely, at least in principle, but reality isn't perfect. Koresh's followers decided, or were forced by he and the rest of the cult leadership, to stay. Once people were shot, The feds weren't going to walk away, and Koresh and his deluded followers weren't coming out, and it went on and on, some people did come out, for whatever reasons, maybe they had a choice to stay or not. If they didn't, it's more blood on Koresh and the cult leadership's heads.

There's not any reason why radio amateurs should concern themselves with what the wider world of radio does. The Morse Code is used for thousands of QSOs daily in amateur radio. That you don't like it, doesn't matter.

You seem to worry a lot over the idea that anyone might look down his you'll be a newbie, a neophyte, a novice.

That's not right, Leonard. The dumbing down has been done by reducing the code testing speed to five words per minute for any class of HF amateur radio license. That will soon be changed to having no morse exam at all. The dumbing down of amateur radio includes easier questions in the written tests and fewer questions in the written exams.

I know many intelligent people who are not radio amateurs at all. I know a number of intelligent people who hold amateur radio licenses which included no Morse Code testing.

When one is dealing with a governmental licensing bureau, there is no "easiest route". Only one route is offered by the rule makers for each license class. The takers of the exam cannot be blamed for the present licensing structure. How can a new general class ham be considered to be inferior to an older general class ham when each ham took the one and only exam available at his particular time
of testing?

Now you're asking something different. Such a General Class licensee could easily be considered to have learned less material since less material is required in order to pass the exam. Surely you can see that.

The easiest way might not be the fastest way--and mice don't take amateur radio exams.

Certainly I can see that - times change. But should the new General Class licensee be forever relegated to the untouchable "nocode CBer" caste simply because of the timing of his birth?

What if he has a PhD in RF engineering to go with his brand new General Class Amateur Radio License? What if he is ex-military and can do 40 wpm in Morse code? Isn't that worth anything or is he predestined to be forever shunned by older amateur radio operators because his exam was easier through no fault of his own?

apearntly the answer yes guilty till proven incocent and even then guilty untill he proves he could inevent a time machine and go to when real hams were created take those tests and vist the various times in betwento keep that license updated and valid

Two items from FCC in today's Federal Register (Vol 72, Number 4), but neither is the Report and Order.

Which means the new rules will not go into effect before February 9, 2007.

The two items are dated December 26 and December 27, 2006.

Actually, that's not always true.

For example, from 1990 to 2000, there were medical waivers for the 13 and 20 wpm Morse Code tests. Those who wanted a General, Advanced or Extra class license had the choice of passing the required test or getting a waiver. Depending on the individual, one route could be easier than the other.

Similarly, for a couple of decades now the Morse Code test(s)
could be passed by either one-minute-solid-copy or fill-in-the-blank route - whichever was easier for the individual.

> The takers of the exam cannot be blamed

In general, that's true. However, if a particular individual worked for changes in the licensing structure....

> How can a new
> general class ham be considered to be inferior to
> an older general class ham when each ham took the
> one and only exam available at his particular time

One person's knowledge may be less than another's,
depending on what was on the tests at the time.

However, a test is simply one data point, not the whole picture.

There's a big difference between pointing out changes in the license tests and making sweeping generalizations about those who passed them.

All mice take the easiest route.

not true the VE's according to Rbeson are free to disregard the signature of MD's at their SOLE WHIM so these medical waivers were always a mostly therictical option like the alleegded accomadations avable to the 5 wpm test

You missed my point. Psk31 is an example of a computer mode that connects directly to a PC sound card, like "computer" CW. I did not need to go into more sophisticated modes to trump your example of electronic CW as being new millenium high technology. It was a very poor example.

Psk31 is just one a newer mode that is simpler than computer CW and better.

BTW, it is not obsolete. Check 14.070 MHz when the band is open (or not) when you get a chance.

Anyway, I do not understand your query; are you saying that mp3 is an "encryption" method? I thought it was an audio codec (like ogg vorbis). Yes, I am aware that ogg vorbis is open source. Do you wish to change the thread to discuss audio codecs?

If you intended to discuss encryption as a separate topic, you had better not be planning on sending "encypted" communications over the bands unless you are controlling satellite telemetry from your earth station.

Or are you saying that sending audio codecs over the bands is your best example of new millenium high technology? That is being done right now and you can buy it pre-packaged in the latest Kenwood rice box if you wish.

OBselete is not useless or unusable

the existance or use of a given mode is NOT proof that the mode is or is not obselete

the use of langauge is as slishod in many case as My spelling

CW morse is obselete PSK-31 narrowor bbw and bexcetera are part of prooving CWmorse is obselete wether PSK-31 itrself may be obseelete is seperate issue

Obselete is not the same as Useless ack any deer killed by a flintlock http://kb9rqz.blogspot.com/

Actually, ECFS was fully functional then. Thousands of comments were filed
using it during that time period, mine included.

Do you have any evidence of wrongdoing, Len? Do you know any of the people involved?
>
> FOUR YEARS OLD!

That's right. They passed the required exams at the age of four years and an unknown number of months.

If someone actually reads the entire story, it becomes clear that the four-year-olds
were part of a large extended family that places a high value on education. Lots of licensed amateurs in the family - none of whom were the VEs.

> That was in 1998. That was NINE YEARS AGO...
> come February or March of this year.

Yup. And according to the FCC database, they are both still licensed amateurs.

Is there any evidence that they have caused any problems at all on the amateur bands?

Actually, the referenced page was in a Reply Comment. Reply Comments are not supposed to contain new ideas - they are only supposed to discuss issues
that have already been raised.

The proper place to bring up new issues like an age requirement is in Comments.
But the comment period had been closed for several weeks when Len sent his disk to the FCC. In fact, his Reply Comment was sent so late that any attempt to reply to it would have been after the deadline.

Oddly enough, the age-requirement thing was brought to the attention of readers by K0HB. His posting can be viewed by using one of these handy
RRAP

Some choice quotes:

(begin quotes)

"BWAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAH!!!!!!!!!
My goodness..."choke off new entrants!" Herr Breakup wants to have an amateur radio community of the future to be prepubescent children?!?!?"

"Let's hear it for the four year old Novices who have READ and UNDERSTOOD
the written test elements and realize their responsibility in having a license!!!"

"Let's hear it for the VEs who have PASSED those CHILDREN for the FCC!!!
"...ultimately reduce the number of licensees below the 'critical mass'"!!!!!"

"What, pray tell, does Herr Breakup think of the 170K+ Technician class licensees added in nine years? Are they "real hams" or is Breakup being a stuffed turkey about that class?"

"Herr Breakup seems to need his Jugend to satisfy His concept of keeping the traditions, legends, and myth of amateur radio forever."

"Ah yes, the warm-hearted convivial stormtrooper from central africa MUST make his SUPERIORITY known! Four year olds who can beep (along with parents who have conned the VEs into passing them) are considered
"superior" to those who are not licensed in the amateur radio service.
BWAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!!!!!!!!!!!!"

"LOSE SOME WEIGHT! You are getting downright pudgy and scowling too much. I'll bet those jackboots and arm band are really tight?"

(end quotes)

Nice stuff, huh? Really adult, mature, civil discussion on the merits of the issue, right? ;-)

And two years after Bat Mitzvah. So what?

Well, you can't be talking about me - because I was first licensed as a radio amateur at age 13.

So what?

The FCC does not require "Full English comprehension" in order to pass the license exams. Just the ability to choose enough right answers.

The written tests are all multiple choice, no more than 1 out of 4. Get enough answers right and the test is passed.

As long as there's no cheating involved,
FCC doesn't care how much the person understands the material covered by the licenses tests. Memorizing, word-association, and just plain guessing are all allowed. There's no additional penalty for a wrong guess, either.

Most of all, it doesn't matter to FCC how old the person being tested is.

> "Fraud?" You betcha.

That's a pretty serious claim, Len.

Do you have any evidence at all?

> What kindly > grandfather could say no to such charming CHILDREN?

Any good one could, if the situation called for it. That's part of what parenting is all about, Len - saying no when it's needed.

> Yet those CHILDREN, having "passed" their license

The FCC has no problem with it. There's no evidence of any problems caused by it. What's your problem, Len?

Besides, you keep lecturing us that amateur radio is "a hobby". So how much harm could a couple of four-year-olds do to "a hobby"?

Why?

Actually, the FCC is the licensing agency. They have accepted the validity of those licenses for more than 8 years now.

If you look at FCC enforcement actions, you'll see that FCC has no problem going after questionable VE activity. If you think there was something wrong at that VE session, why haven't you presented your evidence to FCC?

But according to you, Len, the ARRL is "brainwashing" us.

Besides, you keep lecturing us that amateur radio is "a hobby". So how much harm could a couple of four-year-olds do to "a hobby"?

> Put this OLD SUBJECT to rest, it's

Are you telling others to SHUT UP, Len?

Who besides you gets irritated over this, Len?

And if it bothers you so much, why don't you "drop it"?

> None of us care one

What's the statute of limitations, Len?

How old can a subject be and still be discussed?

Two years? One year?

What are your rules on that?

Or is something only "old" if you say it is?

> Now KMA, 4Q and the hearse you rode in on...

Gee, that's really mature, Len. ;-) I think you need a time-out in your quiet place...

And once more you've proved my point for me. Thanks!

You claimed that you were only interested in the elimination of the Morse Code test, but your Reply Comments and many postings here on this age-limit idea shows there's a lot more you want changed.

indeed and als unlikely to learn a lesson about ebing wrong

have to you seen the thread (at EHam) where someone is inisting th e ARRL should sue the FCC claiming that the FCC is violating part 97 by ending code testing and arguely how this is slam dunk (or words to that effect)

the ProCoder lost and are accepting thier losses with less grace than Al Gore or John Kerry

You still miss the point. To chat with the OT CW'ers you need to key a xmitter from either a port on the sound card, usb, serial, or parallel port on the computer. You also need software to read the code from the rig through the line in on the computer--AND, (and here is the important point) this is how you play with the OT's and CW!!!

I mean, it is good for a laugh :)

If you think I use morse for anything but personal amusement, you are gravely mistaken!

I see there will always be those people that can predict the future. The No Code is just going to bring in Bank Robbers, Rapist, and thieves, Murder's. Wife beater's, And the MOB.
Come on grow up children. You learned the Code and that's just Great, but do you really really have to pick on those that didn't have too..... like they should be lower than life and feel dirtier then a used pair of underwear. You are not showing your Intelligent as little people. When you could be there to help them feel like they had joined up with a great bunch of people. What are you a big bunch of Whiners. Your sounding more like your mad you had to learn it,and your pi$$ed off that they didn't. You don't own the Hobby of Ham Radio!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! Your suppose to be the best part Of it. Not the worst part... Get a life your acting like it will be the end of the world.
Get involved in a real cause ,like people trying to take away your right's. Like the right to bear Arm's, and the right to live in a good and just community. And not one riddled with crime, and Murder. These are just good people wanting to talk on the Ham Band's. Not everybody wants to be a Radio operator. The people that will come into Ham Radio will be people that enjoy talking on the Radio, and if they don't they'll leave and go on to newer and different thing's... Your just trying to be a group of elitist... You don't OWN HAM RADIO PERIOD!!!!!!! Get over it Grow up and get a life. Do something get along for once. You don't have some big CLICK going on here. Anybody that can pass the test's is an OPERATOR!!!!

Tough Crap. It's a License to operate on Ham Band's. The same as it is to have a Driver's license to drive on the Highway's. You don't have a say in it. It's ran by the Government and that's that. Your just not going to be SPECIAL ANY MORE AND YOUR CRYING ABOUT..... STINKEN WHINER'S. What do you get if you put a Whiner on one end of a Teeter Totter and a Queer on the other..... NOTHING !!!! Nothing neither one knows when to SHUT UP...

Thank You for letting me say my peace. I know there a Great Hammer's out there. And you just don't hear them Bitching all the time.
I LOVE ROCK & ROLL. AND beautiful FAST woman Too.. HHHAAAAA HAAAA You got to love it.. It's called LIFE.

Prussian Blue isn't particularly toxic as the cyanide is very tightly bound to the iron. It's actually used to sequester ingested radioactive cesium and thallium.

So much depends on the individual. What was not difficult for you (or myself for that matter, might be really hard for another. Another problem is that young people happen to be pretty good at taking tests. I think some of the older folk forget that.

Sounds just like my experience. I had risen early to go to a Hamfest that was offering tests, and drank too much coffee. Turned out to be a bad idea to be caffeine buzzed and take the MOrse code test. I almost passed. I kinda felt bad for the poor guy grading my test - he looked at avery way he could to figure out how to work a passing grade out of it.

I aced the written.

Well, I don't know about Canada's tests, but it sounds like they may have done something to make the test easier, but reduced privileges.
A little bet of a different matter.

the fact I barely passed the noive written element and did much better on the tech element was related to what I choose to study in each as

Your problem is in thinking that what we have today

presently complain about is the result of creeping socialism and the breeding of welfare masses. We were more capitalistic in those good old days that you long for. Today failure is rewarded and success

1957 was a banner year for Honda. That was when they produced their first 2 cylinder motor under the Dream moniker.

I've owned a Honda 90, Suzuki 100 dualrange, a Honda SL 350, two Yamaha XS 350's, a Montesa VR 250, and one really exotic - a Rickman Zundapp.

Strom is a life-long, well-known white supremacist and Nazi.

Google "Kevin Alfred Strom" and read the material about him. Pay special attention to the articles from the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC).

His only contribution to amateur radio was to encourage a group of middle-age, lardassed, semi-literate wackadoodles to congregate every Saturday night on 3950 where they called themselves the "Liberty Net" -- and where they accomplished nothing except ruining a perfectly good frequency.

The twit has some nerve calling anyone's use of "langage" slipshod. He can't fully understand anything he tries to read and his use of "langage" is so slipshod that most folks can't understand what he writes. In short, Mark is a twit.

My "aronagence contiues", does it? Mark "contiues" to post as a mindless twit. He repeatedly defines "inferior".

I am well provided with Nerve Dave, you are prooly provided for with manner

so much for the code test as filter

but your langaue is slipshod wether it is me stating it or someone else

nope but you go right on with your naming calling and abuse anyway

as I said so much for your aleeged filter of a code test or your aleged adherence to chrsitain doctrine

I don't use my legalname because I've never cared for it. That doesn't mean you won't find it on usenet, though -- you just have to look hard, and in the right groups. As for you, however -- you're an anonymous coward, as well as a stalker and homo-/biphobe, and I therefore anticipate an eventual Bobo Award nomination for you. For that matter, I think the Brown Clownpants Award, heretofore reserved solely for Ying Guo the Non-Existent (won on the basis of extreme cowardice in the face of a Perl script, and an utter lack of comprehensibility in hir posts), is one that may well fit you, and given that your continuing k00kdance has carried right on into 2007, I think this calls for a ruling from the Friendly Neighborhood Vote Wrangler. You are the very model of a chicken, even moreso than Joe Bartlo or Andy Chung, and your repressed homo- or bisexuality, in this day and age, is the essence of comedy.

True, but is there some other piece of Statute Law that states that legislation cannot come into force until it has been promulgated in the Federal Register?

Sounds good to me. I've never heard, or know of, a no-code ham doing anything worse than using incorrect "lingo". BFD. I've heard, and been the victim of extra class hams keying on top of me, ignoring me, etc, all because my call was after a certain date, and I might have been a no-code ham. I passed the code back in 73, that was enough for me.

The focus on the nature of the test (multiple choice) and memorization is specious and contrived to depricate the test. I'm beginning study for a private pilot's license ... and the written test for that is multiple choice, too. In the aviation field there doesn't seem to be a group of old-timers who bemoan the nature of the current test and denigrate newbies - in fact, I see AOPA and everyone I've encountered doing their best to encourage newcomers because they recognize that the future of general aviation depends on it.

Yea ... what else did you expect. Minimum entry requirements are just that. Doesn't matter where you start from. As long as you can pass the minimum requirements you get in. Hopefully you continue to learn and grow.

So??? That only goes to support the fact that Morse is essentially unimportant in today's real world. (not to say you can't still find it fun or that you shouldn't use it)

Despite your assertions, I don't believe that Ed's assertions can be legitimately debunked.

[more snip for brevity]

Again - SO???

Testing for licensure is not about "making folks work for it" or the liberal Democrat idea of "equalizing outcomes" (as opposed to equal OPPORTUNITY).

The equal opportunity is the opportunity to take the prescribed test - no matter WHERE you started from - and, if you pass the test, get a license.

Testing should not be some sort of "social enginneering" exercise, but should ONLY

Mike,

GREAT response - really illustrates the reality!

Unfortunately, too many people fall into your 2nd explaination (just want to bitch - and keep newbies out of "their" bands)

Yes ... he does. It wasn't a week after the Public Notice, but a couple of days, before it was posted to the NCI website (and a link to the Report and Order was posted within 24 hours of its release).

I was on Maui for 10 days on a combination of business and vacation, but modern technology (my EVDO card) alllowed me to access the internet wirelessly from my notebook :-)

The falacy of this whole argument is that current written tests are "easier" than the old written tests.

It is only in the faded memory of old timers that the old written tests were "harder"
... as has been pointed out, they probably seemed hard to the (then newbie)
old timers when they took them, but from all evidence presented it is simply inaccurate
to conclude that they were, in fact, harder.

Somewhere in my papers - I have an article that came out specifically dealing with taking a "Space Patrol" type walkie talkie and placing it on "6 meters" as a QRP rig. I bought a pair to do it - and things got hectic. That became a back burner project. I still have the walkie talkies but have to dig out the paperwork.

Cecil,

Code "isn't" dead "completely", I think we all know that. I believe I am safe in saying that what this guy was getting to was - SC's vigilance to keep insulting No Code Hams OR Ham want to bes. There really IS no reason to keep that up. There is nothing we can do to bring it back - the decision has been made - whether we like it or not. Insults can only help "kill" the hobby.

I've said it before, I'll say it again - if you like it - USE IT. If not - so what!

The horse has been beaten to death - past death, now into the dust. Give it a break. I've blocked all that have supported "his" stupid remarks and argument. It has been going on for at least 6 months. IT IS OVER!

It shouldn't be that big a deal.. I know a lot of the newer ones are basically one IC with a crystal for the transmitter and an RC tank for the receive, so you'd have only two things to change.

"Space Patrol" looks good on a QSL card equipment line, but not as good as "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles."

Right on cue! Robert Wolfe needs competition, and I believe you are fit to be that competition, Wabbit. Indeed, I think you may have what it takes to turn the Mop Jockey into a greasy puddle.

Coward of the Month

Given to the most cowardly, yellow-bellied Usenet chicken of the month. Anyone who meets the current month's eligibility bar can get it; like the HL&S and the Palmjob Paddle, this award is not necessarily reserved for Kooks!

Those who hide behind pseudoanonymous sockpuppets, to say and do things they would not normally say or do as 'themselves', usually make good candidates; you can nominate either the sockpuppet or if you know the real name behind that person; either way, the sockpuppeteer gets just credit.

This award is also given to people who don't follow up on threats. Or respond to hard questions. Or other cowardly acts of which AUK can be convinced.

For his continuing campaign of laming Mark Morgan (and Lloyd Davies, Andy Timberlake, and others) for his bisexuality (and the fact that he's out of the closet, like me), his dyslexia, and his Paganism under a variety of frogging nyms and morphs, for lo these many months, I, Snarky, Supreme High Overlord of rec.radio.*, do hereby nominate for Coward of the Month the entity or collective entity known as "Wabbit" (in honour of his/their emulation of Roger "Woger Wabbit" Wiseman, or possible true identity as such).

There was a group of us back in Boston in the late 80s doing that a lot ... we had a big bin of the xtals, and were tuning them up for a local 6m repeater.

I also had a simplex pair that I used to build a fun 2400 bps packet rig.

Imminently hackable, and amazingly cheap.

Good memories.

Computer software consists of only two components: ones and zeros, in roughly equal proportions. All that is required is to sort them into the correct order.

Eham is not moderated perse although a few realy obnoxious folks have been banned but the discussion of that that proceeds more civily than it would here but a couple of argue how the ARRL should sue and that we noCoder are afraid of the result worse I have heard from NCT's is a case of one being citied for using the word "shit" in monet of shock a few case of jaming repeater a few case of operating where they should be

I never heard of anything like K1man or the Liberty net from the NCT and I too have people key up on top of me (without even IDing and

Today's test are harder or eaiser than the former ones

there were what was deemed proper then if they were harder maybe they were harder than they needed to be maybe not but with changing times

Yeah - the biggest deal of it was changing the crystal. I think the coils and so on - were pretty much there within reason to oscillate. Been a while since I read the article though.

LIfe of a flourescent bulb is measured more in on/off cycles than on time. I keep a small lamp on in the kitchen it has been on ever since we moved into this house which is now over 15 years, only going off during power failures.
On the other hand the other florescent lights in the kitchen are switched several times a day and only last 2 or 3 years.

This brings to mind... the military has lots of those horrible little AN/PRT-4A transmitters selling dirt cheap on the surplus market. They are kind of neat because they have a 455 KHz oscillator to shift the frequency of the crystal up, allowing you to use the same crystal for the transmitter as you did for the (seperate) receiver.

NOBODY has documentation on these things. The LOGSA database has them still listed as unavailable except within the military. Does anyone have a schematic on these?

As I recall, these were issued in Vietnam for communication within units, but were mostly famous for drawing fire with their large antennae and for poor signal quality.

So, let's re-cap Mark's wonderful life, as he tells it:

1) He was drafted into the US Army.
2) He is a member of the Chemical Corps.
3) The military won't let him retire.
4) He doesn't serve under the name 'Mark Morgan', but that's okay, 'cuz
the FBI, DOD, and CIA have all told him he can do it.
5) He is on-the-lam from stalking former marines and fatal
attractionex-wives
6) He was, until recently, paying $5/hr. to access his ISP
7) He has a 248 IQ, but can't figure out how to use a spell checker.
8) He is a bi-sexual 33 yr. old Pagan male ham who likes to be spanked.
9) He can't find any action on the military base in Central IL, so he has to ask people on USENET.

Have I missed anything?

Oh, Wait! Mark recently said:

"they want to do soemthing I have never done before lead men in battle
the war is treching things quuit e abit
I tell em no hell no and no fucking way"

(One has to wonder what the war is "trechings"??)

Doesn't matter, he won't deciding what his sexual activities consist of

There was one guy, can't remember his call up North of here who was sent

Kind of like sending Morse Code so poorly that a Technician with a computer reader couldn't copy it.

I think Cecil was making a point, not actually presenting a method of operation.

Yes, and as it was pointed out to me, it can (and probably is usually true) that the effectivity can be conditional on the FR publication if this is stated in the body of the law, as it was. I continue to be amazed at our system of laws; legislators make laws without knowing when they will actually become effective. The actual effectivity dates are delegated to non-elected bureaucrats who publish a paper. I cannot imagine that some laws whose effectivity dates can mean the accumulation (or loss) of wealth for each day publication is delayed or speeded up could have not a corruptive effect on these nameless people.

A war could be declared but not be put into effect until 30 days after publication in the Federal Register.

No - but there doesn't have to be.

The basic problem is that some folks either didn't read or didn't understand
the test of the Report and Order.

FCC 06-178

can be downloaded from:

http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/FCC-06-178A1.pdf

in PDF

On Sheet 17 (of 41) it says:

"VI. ORDERING CLAUSES

40. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Part 97 of the Commission's Rules IS AMENDED as specified in Appendix A, effective [30 days after publication in the Federal Register]."

There's no need of any external law tying FCC action to the Federal Register, because the FCC did that as part of the R&O itself, rather than specifying an effective date.

AFAIK, it's done this way to avoid conflicts. The R&O is effectively
"out there" for anyone to look at, but if there were some sort of conflict with another govt.
agency, etc., or a mistake in the R&O, FCC could take action before the effective date, and/or hold up implementation by not publishing. That's extremely doubtful in this case - the delay in getting the R&O published is almost certainly simple bureaucratic procedure.

Not all FCC actions go through that procedure. Emergency declarations are one example - they're usually effective immediately.

Sooner or later all the wheels will turn!

Interesting logical leap. If one chooses not to use a certain technology (i.e. ignores computer CW), can he then be accused of radio prejudice for ignoring people who use the technology that he chooses not to use?

If I ignore AM radio, does that mean that I am prejudiced against you because you like AM radio?

What's wrong with being prejudiced? It saves me

First you would have to convince me you are psychic; as, that is the ONLY way you can differentiate between computer-generated CW and non-computer-generated ...

Minor, inconsequential and random errors are easily programmed into the computer generated model, but will give the morse that "unique signature" of the "imitated keyers style."

Straight keys are relatively easy to recognize.
Sometimes it is impossible to program a machine to be that bad on purpose. :-) I heard a guy on straight key night where his dits were 75% the length of his dahs - amazingly hard to copy.

I was simply referring to those who refuse to work someone on CW only because they are using a computer. I've even read posts here of hams that said if they suspect someone is copying CW by computer they switch to excessive weight and poor sending just to mess up the copy. Seems kind of snobbish to me.

IMO the perfect fist sounds like computer generated CW. And it's the easiest to copy. All those so called 'unique fists' can be copied but it's like trying to understand someone from Brooklyn (or Texas)... ;)

AaronJ:

They (those guys with the brass taps on, doing a tap dance here) truly show their ignorance if that is their claim. They get away with that chit because few have professional programming experience here, indeed, 2nd or 3rd year software engineering students would even be able to "pull their covers."

If the ear can tell the difference between a di and a dah, the computer sure as heck will not be fooled!

This would only require that polymorphic coding be used in the software (self-adapting to such changes which can be deduced and "programmed for") and adaptive timing (comparing lengths of key-ons (di to dah) and constantly adapting for changes--only caring for the fact that a di is consistently shorter than a dah.)

While this might be an interesting enough project for a 2nd to 3rd year college student, most upper division students would be required to have skills capable of solving much more complex problems involving algorithms with magnitudes of greater complexity!

Any software engineer who possesses a bachelors degree will support this, even if they know NOTHING about amateur radio and ONLY that there will ALWAYS be a difference in length between a di and a dah and these length differences are (or may be) of a constantly variable nature.

If you doubt me, call up a college and ask to speak to a instructor in software engineering ... don't take my word for it.

But, take this bunch of ancient key tappers as any type of software/algorithm experts? YOU HAVE TO BE KIDDING ME!!!

Yanno, after reading enough of these posts, you are likely to come to the same conclusion I have; these guys think a ham ticket is the equivalent to a "Doctorate In Everything."

Once you catch on, it is quite funny to watch, and indicative of what

They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats. Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.

The programming experience of most hams has little to do with their ability to work computer CW. Virtually everybody I work (who admits to) using a computer on CW is using either a commercial multimode decoding box or commercial computer software and an interface.

>If the ear can tell the difference between a di and a dah, the computer >sure as heck will not be fooled!

IMO the ear still beats computer copy in real life. I've played with a lot of multimodes and software over the years and none has ever come close to ear copy under poor signal conditions and/or someone with a poor fist.

>This would only require that polymorphic coding be used in the software...

My computer screen might read NNTTA when the op was really sending CQ. The computer saw five letters when there were really two because the op had poor letter spacing. My ear picked up the CQ easily, but the computer read gibberish. When I contact him I will still be able to understand him while the computer continues to spit out gibberish. Your program is going to need to understand English grammar and Q signals along with timing to solve this type of problem... ;)

>Any software engineer who possesses a bachelors degree will support >this, even if they know NOTHING about amateur radio and ONLY that there >will ALWAYS be a difference in length between a di and a dah and these

It may be possible to write such a perfect CW program, but so far I haven't found one. Maybe someone else here has. So for our victim who is using currently available software it's certainly possible for the jerks to screw up his copy with poor sending. But lets hope they were just spouting off in the post.

BTW Some advantages of computer CW:
It's fun to have a 80 or 100+ WPM QSO.
It's a great way to get your code speed up. Watch the screen while you listen to the code at just above your speed. After awhile turn the screen away and you will be copying in your head at the new speed.

A disadvantage of using computer CW:
During a QSO you can't turn up the speaker and leave the room to take a leak... ;)

Dyslexic, so he says. By now, I'm inclined to assume he either can't use a spell-check, or else considers it to be too much trouble. He's a bit stupid or inconsiderate that way, but Wabbit, OTOH, is simply vile. His foam is entertaining, however.

Plagiarism is your friend. Use it.
Whenever contradicted; morph, start calling people names, and make false accusations. Include the children of your target in your allegations, even if they don't have any.
(06-Jun-05) When nobody else will listen, post to your own fan group.
(06-Jun-05) Obviously, since you have your own fan group, this must mean that you have fans. Post prolifically to your fan group - you wouldn't want to disappoint them!
(10-May-2005)Everyone reads usenet. Approval here means approval everywhere.
Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too
When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.
Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!

Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.
(17-Mar-05) When dealing with law enforcement, remember that it is they who have the problem, not you. Be sure to inform them of this at every available opportunity, as they will surely appreciate your constructive criticism. Be sure to make them aware that YOU KNOW YOUR RIGHTS! The more your fake personalities adulate you, the more respect you'll get!
When confronted with a reality that you don't like: Announce loudly that you are departing, never to return as long as there's an Internet. Come back in three or four days and claim you were drunk, hacked, abducted by alience, or forged. Alternately you can just not even mention your prior departure, and if anyone asks you about it, either ignore them or respond with something along the lines of "YOUR NOT THE BOSS OF ME! PLONK!" There are seven (7) items from FCC in today's Federal Register (Vol 72, Number 6). None of them are the Report and Order.

The Federal Register can be viewed online at:

http://www.gpoaccess.gov/fr/index.html

The most recent edition of the Federal Register can be viewed online at:

http://www.access.gpo.gov/su_docs/aces/fr-cont.html

(HTML)

(PDF)

Agencies are listed in alphabetic order, making it easy to find the FCC.

We now have a USA Congress that was elected on an anti-Iraq war platform. Yesterday the key Democrats made the evening news in stating that they won't vote to cut off $$$ for the war. But, they will provide a non-binding resolution that the 'Sense of Congress' disapproves of the war. Heck, we knew that before the fools got sworn in!

If you're against the war, vote against paying for the war!! [become responsible ... not a wishy washy dish-rag!] AKA Put up or shut up!

No, he (Mark) was deemed too boring to be worthy of any attention from AUK (though he didn't get placed in the Galactic Killfile by the FNVW (an executive appointment only -- he's a cruel dictator, but fair, after his fashion), it'll take some serious campaigning on his part to win eligibility (i.e., a seconded nomination and support from the FNVW) for any other awards) last summer, so he won the Golden Killfile instead.
However, his frogger(s) (you have to look closely, but all of the other's posts are non-replyable, thus he evades breaking the TOS with his ISP) has(have) been singularly cowardly in his(their) refusal to post his(their) crap under his(their) own name(s), thus he is/they are nominated (and validly seconded) for Coward otM.

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION (RFD)
moderated group rec.radio.amateur.moderated

This is a formal Request For Discussion (RFD) for the creation of the moderated Usenet newsgroup, rec.radio.amateur.moderated.

NEWSGROUPS LINE: rec.radio.amateur.moderated

rec.radio.amateur.moderated Amateur radio practices, rules, etc. (Moderated)

RATIONALE: rec.radio.amateur.moderated rec.radio.amateur.moderated is a moderated alternative to the existing rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroups. The rec.radio.amateur.misc newsgroup is chartered to discuss amateur ("ham") radio practices, contents, events, rules, etc., including anything related to amateur radio not specifically covered by another rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroup. The rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroup is chartered to discuss ham radio rules, regulations, and policy. Over the past several years, the traffic on both groups has become largely flame wars, spam, and personal ad-hominem discussions of past, present, and future violations and violators, having little or no bearing on amateur radio. Polite requests by serious group posters to the offenders to refrain from such behavior have not resulted in elimination of such behavior and has in fact resulted in another series of flame wars. As a result, many knowledgeable and concerned posters in both groups have ceased being active therein.

Prior to the deterioration of rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy, both groups had active discussion of their chartered topics. It is expected that offering a moderated group will persuade those who formerly participated to resume their participation in rational, focussed, and informed discussion. Proper moderation will enable serious postings to the group to remain on topic while not limiting who can voice opinions or what opinions can be voiced.

Combining the topics of the unmoderated rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroups into a single moderated newsgroup is offered as the most practical solution for both the moderators and the participants at this time. This proposal does not necessarily presume that any other rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroups and their topics require moderated alternatives at this time.

CHARTER:
```

rec.radio.amateur.moderated is for the discussion of amateur ("ham") radio. It is not limited to the rules of any one country or time period. Possible topics include past, present, and future operating practices; events; contests; past, present, and potential-future rules;
power limitations; authorized frequencies; allowed modes and band plans (or other gentlemen's agreements) that govern how we are to operate;
what constitutes the acceptable operation of amateur stations.

General communications law or government policy of various government agencies is also on-topic, as long as the discussion relates to amateur radio. Examples would be emergency communications, local antenna restrictions, and property deed restrictions applying to operation of amateur radio stations.

Discussion of other type of radio, such as Citizens Band, Broadcast, other Personal Radio Services, Commercial or Private Land Mobile, and Marine or Aviation services are off-topic, except when directly related to amateur radio. Similarly, discussion of methods violating applicable communication law and regulations concerning radio equipment or operations are off-topic.

The following are prohibited:

* Personal advertisements.
* Commercial advertisements and money-making schemes.
* Chain letters.
* Posts in HTML.
* EMP spam.
* Binaries, apart from PGP signatures, X-Face headers, and other ancillary article meta-data.
* Forgery of valid e-mail addresses.
* Excessive morphing/nym-shifting.
* Copyright violations. Pointers to news articles, blogs, etc. on this topic are welcome but are required to comply with fair use standards.
* Personal attacks and flames, as defined by the moderation team.
* Advertising items and/or services for sale.
* Links to "objectionable" web content, including pornographic sites, sites encouraging illegal activities, or sites deemed unacceptable
by the moderation team.
* Discussion of moderation decisions. See below for information on appealing moderator action.

Secure, Team-Based Usenet Moderation Program (STUMP)

MODERATION POLICY: rec.radio.amateur.moderated

A moderation robot will scan all submitted posts. Each post will be either automatically approved, rejected, or sent to the moderators for manual review. The moderator 'bot will enforce the following guidelines:

* Crossposting is generally not allowed, with the general exception of crossposts of bulletins, FAQ's, and other informational articles to rec.radio.info, rec.answers, and news.answers. Infrequent administrative crossposts may occasionally be allowed at the sole discretion of the moderator.

* Postings must be in plain text. In particular no HTML or mixed text and HTML posts will be allowed. Messages that are multipart/alternative will be automatically filtered to pass just the text/plain version to the newsgroup.

* No binary postings of any sort will be accepted. Exceptions will be made for cryptographic signatures and such.

* Messages must not have a 'Followup-To' header that points out of rec.radio.amateur.moderated (other than to "poster").

* Messages must not continue a thread that has been "closed" by the moderators.

Individual posters may be temporarily banned for consistently violating the group charter. Posters who feel that their posts have been unfairly rejected or banned by a specific moderator may appeal the decision by contacting the Appeals Board, consisting of a rotating group of 2 or more moderators, at the Administrative Contact address below. The Board will discuss and vote on the appeal and respond within 14 days if the appeal is successful.

Multiple temporary bans, attempting to circumvent the ban, or abuse of the appeal system may result in a permanent ban.

MODERATOR INFO: rec.radio.amateur.moderated

Moderator: Paul W. Schleck, K3FU <pschleck@novia.net>
Moderator: Bob Diepenbrock, KC4UAI <bob_deep@yahoo.com>
Moderator: Jack Cook, VK2CJC <vk2cjc@bigpond.com>
Moderator: Jim Hampton, AA2QA <aa2qa@frontiernet.net>
Moderator: Ace Ratliff, WH2T <ace@wh2t.com>
Moderator: Jeff Angus, WA6FWI <jangus@socal.rr.com>
Moderator: Hans Brakob, K0HB <k0hb@arrl.net>

In addition, the rec.radio.amateur.moderated Moderation Team will utilize the expertise of the following consultants:

Consultant: Cecil A. Moore, W5DXP <Cecil.A.Moore@ieee.org>
Consultant: Phil Kane, K2ASP <k2asp@arrl.net>
Consultant: Brian Short, K7ON <k7on@comcast.net>

The moderators are seeking additional candidates for the moderation team in order to ensure minimal posting delays and to avoid any appearance of bias. We would especially like to find moderators in other time zones, countries/continents, etc.

END MODERATOR INFO

PROCEDURE:

For more information on the newsgroup creation process, please see:

http://www.big-8.org/dokuwiki/doku.php?id=policies:creation

Those who wish to influence the development of this RFD and its final resolution should subscribe to news.groups.proposals and participate in the relevant threads in that newsgroup. This is both a courtesy to groups in which discussion of creating a new group is off-topic as well as the best method of making sure that one's comments or criticisms are heard.

All discussion of active proposals should be posted to news.groups.proposals.
To this end, the 'Followup-To' header of this RFD has been set to this group.

If desired by the readership of closely affected groups, the discussion may be crossposted to those groups, but care must be taken to ensure that all discussion appears in news.groups.proposals as well.

We urge those who would like to read or post in the proposed newsgroup to make a comment to that effect in this thread; we ask proponents to keep a list of such positive posts with the relevant message ID (e.g., Barney Fife, <4JGdnb60fsMzHA7ZnZ2dnUVZ_rWdnZ2d@sysmatrix.net>).
Such lists of positive feedback for the proposal may constitute good evidence that the group will be well-used if it is created.

DISTRIBUTION:

too much trouble and the mispeling serve a purpose in the NG my posts are intended for since the subject has been testing for Morse Code use in real time, and allowing the my normaly mispeeling unchecked shows that if I did somehow mange to learn Morse Code for such a purpose I could never use since what you see on USENET has some proofing what I would send using ham radio could have none

thus every sentence posted helps make the point that those claiming first the timing of this proposal would seem to indicate that the makers of the of are unable to deviler the proposed NG in a timely manner as this was first being discussed in July 2006 with a promised delveiery date of falll 2006 as can be by this being JAN 2007 I find it highly dubious that the ng can in fact function in timely if it can't be rolled out in a timly manner

the charter would exclude materail from the general topic of comuncation by RF which means it can't not truely further the interestes of the Topic amateur except in reinforcing the insular view held by some Hams that Ham radio exists in total isolation from the rest of RF

the pronent has hardly been in RRAP in year

amoug the moderators areis at least one individual that has taken part in the flaming ot flaming of myself that being WH2T posting material insiting that I must be mental ill by distorting the works of the AMA and APA indeed was part of the fuel thrown on the flame
none of the llist a single repsentive form the largest class indeed all seem to be respentives of one the smalest class of US licnse holder which certainly inpsires no confendince that the interest or view point of the 90 of the holder of Us Ham tickets will be respected, nor do ANY of the moderator show to my PERSONAL knowledge any real signs of being knowledge of, let alone sympathetic to the interest of the tech/vhf and up user of Ham Radio

the body consists of people largely unknown to a comon poster over many years what poster I know something NONE comes from that gruop that thinks Code USE is not good for the ARS not merely testing and as far as I know only one was even a member of NCI or the NoCode test movement in general

what apears is an effort to establish another version of Good old boys club (in literal sense as well as figuritly) to at least partails replace the one that NCI has recently otherthwon

I honestly don't see where the new gruop is needed. indeed now that the current issue has been settled we already see signs of claming and a setttling down even the return of some poster that had abesnted themselves the cuase truly of the normal sniping geting out of hand is it becoming obvois that one side was wining the Code debate which had caesed being a deabte but a ralling cuase where both side had to contiue to keep the follow interested excetra and some of the parties resorted to same sort of negitive campaigning that we see in the outer world in politics

I must furth object to insiting the the proposals be required as it is NOT carried by my prefered provider

I don't see a valid reason to object for this reason. This was in progress for quite some time and the fact that we didn't rush out and file the RFD before we felt we where ready seems like a good thing to me.

How so? As I read the RFD (which I helped draft) discussions of Ham Radio as compared and contrasted to other types of service are not considered off topic as long as there is a connection of interest to Ham Radio.

No single moderator will control the group and if you have any difficulties with a moderation decision, you have the ability to appeal said decision to the whole team. The point of the proposed moderation is not to control the viewpoint expressed, but to keep things on topic and useful to the readers.

I don't understand why this is an issue. No code testing is now the reality and soon will be the law of the land. Why the FCC did or did not retain this or what my personal feelings are about it does not enter into the decision to allow a post or not on the proposed group. I think the folks who have signed up thus far all would agree that this is not an attempt to limit discussion to our own viewpoint, but an effort to keep things on topic and useful by eliminating personal attacks and some of the real trash that gets posted here.

Great proposal.

Can't wait to cast my vote for the affirmative.

The only dissenting opinion you'll find are those who wish to spew their sewage into a forum like such, and will otherwise be shut out from doing so.

and yet if someone has to appela many or most discision made by a single moderateor as seem likely then it is possible fr siad moderator to effectively sideline anyone he wishes that I objected to a particaular moderator fro bring his religious views into the subject of discussion and indeed being a particapate in the behoavir mdoeration is suposed to curb does not inspire confednce

but I disagree the point DOES seem to control the veiwpoints expressed the scruour behavoir of the PrOcder Like Ace and Robeson in seking to use sexaulity as issue was acceptable to most the problem only seem to arive when one of the targeted persons choose to resist vigorously

The followups in the original RFD were directed to news.groups.proposals and ONLY to news.groups.proposals for a reason: That group is moderated. Hence, I trimmed that moderated newsgroup from this thread, because this thread is not presently following the no crossposts protocol.

The discussion has just begun, and already you people are incapable of following directions.

Indeed, Mark Morgan is correct that a search of Google Groups reveals that Paul W. Schleck has NOT been a user of the groups he proposes to rescue. As a non-user, his credibility will be hurt with the Big 8 Board if they continue with their past behavior. However, the suggested moderators are not strangers to the rec.radio.amateur news groups, and that should help immeasurably.

But Mark has an axe to grind and actually fears the creation of a moderated group. That's one of the reasons that I will file a proper comment to news.groups.proposals in favor of the creation of the new group. I would like to see abusers like Mark lose their ability to destroy any rec.radio.amateur news group at will. Should rec.radio.amateur.moderated be approved, that will be a group which cannot be vandalized by his kind.

There will be no impact on anyone using rrap or rram, because both of those groups will continue "as is." According to the RFD, the new group will be an additional group in which noise suppression by means of a robot will at first be attempted. I see no reason for anyone to oppose the creation of such a group, and I can see that there is at least the possibility that it will turn out to be an asset to the amateur radio community.

So I say, yes! Go ahead and give it a try. Only kooks can possibly feel threatened by its creation. I will shortly post an affirmative comment in news.groups.proposals.

Also note that, by posting your comments only to news.groups.proposals, you will assured that people like Mark can't try out what they call "thread hijacking." The vandals are powerless there.

indeed the NG will not even permit me to post my comments or to vote that makes the lack of fairness of the result obvious from before we

Again, I don't understand your objections for a number of reasons.
First, I'm finding it difficult to wade though your post and determine exactly what you are trying to say. (I think there is some spelling and gramar issues that are causing me problems, so forgive me if I get something wrong here.) Second, this group is not moderated so my failure to attempt to moderate (by objecting to what he posted) a poster in this group is a reason you would not support a moderated group? That doesn't make sense to me. Had I come out and railed against all the trash that gets posted here it would be used to bash the proposal just because my name is on the proponent list? I don't read all the trash that gets posted here mainly because it's not worth the time to sort through all the garbage, I'm sure I'm not alone. This is the reason I started to work on this RFD months ago. Given this, how can a failure to denounce specific posts be used as reason to reject this RRD?

Second, are you saying that you don't think the criteria used to evaluate prospective postings are acceptable or that you don't think it will be used fairly?

Given our past discussions, it seems that you want your cake and to eat it to... On one hand you want me to openly object to content in these unmoderated groups, but on the other you are afraid of having your view point squashed by the establishment of a moderated group being created.
Nowhere does the proposed policy list "disagreement with the moderator's personal views" as grounds for rejection of posts.

You and I have had debates on these forums in the past. I cannot speak for the whole team, nor can I address posts of yours I haven't read, but I don't seem to recall any of your posts that I would have rejected based on the conditions in the proposed RFD. I certainly don't agree with many of the view points you may have, but we can still have a meaningful debate of the facts, agree that we don't agree, and move on without having to get into nasty personal attacks.

Further, these forums will not be changed by this RFD should it be approved. They will continue to be as they are now, free for all to post what they want. The only thing that will change is that there will be a new place that will hopefully be a lot less garbage to wade through so meaningful debate can more easily take place.

You can't be serious. Why not include you? Because your objectionable and continually disruptive behaviour preceeds you, Mark. Your record with QRZ is one indicator, but the other, and worst, is that you were summarily banned from the very bottom-feeder of groups, the Nim Busters board.
Your vote and/or comments is just what a new, moderated group does NOT need.
YOU are exactly what a moderated group is, by design, intending to prohibit.

You are solely responsible for your bed of thorns, Mark. Now lay in, accept it, and stop whining.

It's likely worth pointing out that their "ability to deliver" actually rests on outsiders.

This isn't a popularity vote (and of course this isn't yet a vote). The process is about ensuring that not yet another unneeded newsgroup is created. So while I forget the exact proportions, a Call for Vote requires not just sufficient votes in favor, but those votes have to be greater than the no votes. And unlike those particularly interested in the topic at hand, the no votes can come from everywhere, because yet another newsgroup requires more resources, and the voting process is to filter out the unneeded.

So a vote, if it gets that far (and getting to a vote also depends on those outsiders), will require not just convincing hams to vote for it, it requires convincing outsiders that there is good reason not to vote against the new newsgroup.

I should also point out, while I'm posting, that you'd actually want disinterested moderators. Because then they'd be filtering the junk, and not being concerned with what is being said beyond making sure it's not off-topic. "Balanced" moderators may be worse than disinterested moderators.

you missed it I object to the fact that one of the pronent (paul) of the moderated aserts from himself preveledges that he attacks me for for when I do the same thing

particaularly when this person proposes to be a moderator

I object in toincluding in the moderation team another moderator that has particpated in the Gay bashing that has been used to detail RRAP

I don't know that I understand the criteria so I don't know/. some RRAP poster such Dave Heil have argued that My sexuality is relavant to RRAP as somehow reflecting on my trustworthness and other charter related isses I conceed he has SOME point in this but how your crtieria would deal with this I don't know. Given the inclusion in the moderating team a man that has expressed strong antiBLGT views I don't realy excpect even handed treament

I also supect in the case Ace they will not be aplied fairly. How can I expect to be treated fairly by man that has called me MENTAL ILL in in RRAP based on his relisous convicttion that define my sexuality as as sinfull etc

where I recall post of my own that I would HOPE you would rejected I would also HOPe that I would not find need to resort to those tactics

Indeed from reading Ruals Post I believe I am personaly am one of the targets of this effort. Indeed Paul seem to begin to complain about RRAP when I choose to finaly RESPOND in something like kind to the treatment that he began to object I can recall posts and private email from Pual derected at my posts and I saw no posts from him comending

the posts that drove to those unpleasent tactics

I would hope so but I have have based on past interaction serious issues with ACE concerns about Paul and don't have any meory of interactions to give confindence in yourself or knowledge of the rest.

I have a friend that works for PERSCOM in Alexandria. Well find out if Markie is FOS, but I suspect like a majority of sexual deviants, and considering all the free time he has to post to the NG's, Markie is probably an under acheiver just like Woger and Lloyd.

Markie,

First, I am not forging anything. Where have I represented myself as that mutant Lloyd??? Second, Lloyd knows who I am because I told him who I was seven years ago, way before your stupid ass showed up on this NG, he still whines about my NG identifier although even he can figure out its a parody. Third, I don't know who "Robeson" is, or care about his purported rules. Last, my posts are not a lie, nor do they need to be, I will call my friend that works in the Hoffman Building to find out what I already think is true. That your are a lying POS deviant under-acheiver who spends all of your time on the internet lying about some make believe military service, but nevertheless, time will tell.

Mark, you constantly stick your big nose where it's not wanted or needed.
You deserve what you get. You don't know when to/can't keep your mouth shut.
You remind me of the little punks at school who hid behind the principle all day talking shit, knowing all the while that when they left school walking home that they would get the shit pounded out of them. Then the following day, it all started over. That Mark, is you. You're only saving grace is that this us Usenet, and no one can touch you. And Mark, yes, that is a problem in your mental makeup. Now, the big kids are tired of you, and they are making their own Mark-free zone, and it pisses you off. Well, just consider that being similar to the cool kids playing sports. You can't make the team. Get over it and move on.

I would not expect that any of this would be "in play" in a new group.
Read the proposed criteria and decide for yourself. I for one don't intend to be heavy handed in the moderation. Stay on topic and be respectful to others and I'm not going to reject your posts.

<snip>> > Nowhere does the proposed policy list "disagreement with the

Thus the appeals process. I don't expect that we will always get it 100% right the first time, but I hope we can keep things in the center of the road most of the time by getting a number of folks all looking at it objectively.

> >
> >You and I have had debates on these forums in the past.

Perhaps we haven't, but I thought I was responding to a different person "an old friend" with whom I recall having a few debates over the last year.

I hope that if the RFD ends up generating the new group that merely the threat of being moderated would keep things under control and the actual moderation task will be very limited.

Having been involved in the formation of the RFD and involved in the debate of the moderation policy, I don't think any of these personal issues matter to the proposed group and certainly is not part of any discussions the proposed moderators have had by my mail records. I for one would not stand by and let personal differences knowingly impact moderation decisions by me or others in the team. This is why the appeal process in the RFD was included and why we are even now appealing for more volunteers to help with the moderation tasks.

Well, there was some debate about this a few years back. It centered around a couple of things; 1) being a lack of an actual definition of Morse Code in Title 47, and 2) the desire of several of the Pro-Code Test folks to claim that a method of TEACHING Morse Code should be used as a Morse Code Exam, i.e., the Farnsworth Code.

Morse Code had previously been defined with specific dot, dash, and space interval ratios. Exams were then defined as Morse Code sent at rates of 20, 13, and 5 WPM. Today, they use the Teaching Method of Farnsworth Code, where the dot, dash, and interval can be anything desired, and character speeds of 13 to 15 WPM for a 5 WPM exam. That's fine for learning the code as Part 97 doesn't address any particular method, nor does it advocate any particular vendor such as W5YI or ARRL.

Yet Part 97 still, even to this day, requires a Morse Code Exam (Farnsworth isn't mentioned) at a Morse Code Rate of 5 WPM. Lengthening the space interval isn't addressed as a way to get 13 to 15 WPM character speeds down to 5 WPM word rate. But hey, Part 97 is only a suggestion, right?

And none of that matters now, anyway.

Anyhow, the Pro-Code Exam folks were all over the notion that code was an individual thing and that each person's code sounded like "speech" to them because of all of the little and big imperfections, and sometimes the big imperfections were deliberate. I was chided for suggesting that manually sent code should be formed as precisely as one could make it, which sparked another debate. Apparently, humans trying to send perfect code shouldn't be a goal in amateur radio, even if unachievable. Which took us full circle to the humans emulating modems of the original invention of Sammy Morse, the code paper tape with dashes and longer dashes scribed on them.

Oh, well, it was a nice walk in the park. The PCTA folks arguments were as imperfect as the code they send.

That's correct; sequestering agent = chelating agent = complexing agent.

gibven the fact they need a vote at some and I frankly DO have friends
I supect they are more likely to listen to my concerns and avoid a fight with me rather choose to fight

nor do I expect it to Mark Free I merely expect with gay bashing mod
it will be an uphill fight that is a hope but given the behavoir HERE of a number of the worst offenders I would expect you might bend up getting what amount to DoS attack flooding the mods hoping to either get stuff through out of fatague or prvent the NG from funtioning at all such tactics have been used By Robeson and Wismen here, Indeed I have which works how given the moderation has not cleared a single post of mine that I am aware to the proposal gruop where it bleong I am frankly dubious of the concet proposed if I am excluded from that process My posts have neither apeared nor has anything been the email account they were tagged with Konstans@hotmail.com indiacted they have

I frankly find myself wondering if it will be physcail possible for me

But I think you will find that most hams are like me. They are not professionally in electronics or computers, and thus buy mostly commercial radios and software.

Do you mean a CW program that prints perfectly under all conditions found on the ham bands? I assure you that no such animal exists.

>I can hardly believe there is no commercial-ware which can't,

I doubt that there's much of a market for CW software. The vast majority of CW ops are over 60 and dying off fast. Then the FCC won't force newcomers to learn the code anymore so that market is gone. (I sure wouldn't have learned it if they hadn't forced me to.) Since there's not much money to be made on a dying market there's not much incentive to invest a lot of time writing the perfect program. And I suspect most CW ops are like me and probably wouldn't buy it anyway cause we would prefer to do it the old fashioned way anyway... ;)

>And trust me, long after your ear fails to copy solid, a good software utility can ...

We'll just have to agree to disagree on this one. IMO the old computer between the ears still does the best all around job, especially under poor conditions.

And it can be handy. Sometimes when I'm playing with the computer CW program and it's printing well, I can have a short conversation with the XYL and then catch up on the QSO a minute later. Some oldtimers used to claim to be able to head copy on the radio and chat with a person in the room at the same time. But I could never do that... ;)

I have no opinion on the best way to learn the code. I learned my code the old fashioned way, one letter at a time back in 1957. And I passed my test decoding and writing one letter at a time. But in practice I don't it one letter at a time.

>folks were all over the notion that code was >an individual thing and that each person's code sounded like "speech"

When you learn to head copy (no paper), eventually you will not decode the individual letters but rather the words. The words have their distinct sounds. And even if someone uses a word you don't know, the code sequence sounds like phonics in your head and you still 'hear' the word. For this reason some say that CW is a pseudo-language. That may be a poor word for it but you get the idea. And if you talk to the same guy or group of guys regularly you will learn to recognize their 'voices' on CW.

>I was chided for suggesting that manually sent code should be formed

IMO you should try to send like a computer... ;)

>Which took us full circle to the humans emulating modems

I like CW only because it's fun to me. The analogy might be that going someplace by horse is not efficient, but it's sure fun...

Sounds like him. Lots of CAPS, use of "summarily" and ordering you to lay in you "bed of thorns." Sheesh. I think all he learned from the USMC was the drama from the guys in the campaign hats. Or from watching too "Stripes" once too often.

> any coment of the propoasol for moderation BB?

We've gone from Paul talking about this stuff a year ago to "POOF!" a whole list of moderators and consultants, many of whom I've never heard of and the others posting very infrequently, complete with a constitution, articles of incorporation, and rules of enagement.

So when did all this happen?

And wh6hz thinks he gets to vote! Hi, hi!

If there's anything more pathetic than a dyslexic in desperate need of a spell-check program but who refuses to use one, it's a really convincing frog of same. Wabbit, you've already won the Bartlo once. Are you trying for another?

I agree, yet we have a couple of folks here already crying foul.

Likewise, I read a number of moderated e-mail reflectors. If anyone gets out of line, he is warned. If he persists, he is gone. Civility

Look, pinhead: Contrary to your constant whining, this newsgroup IS NOT ABOUT YOU!!!! Yet that is exactly what you have tried to make of it.

I don't give a damn about your feud with Robeson, but I do know that I did give a damn when you and Robeson repeatedly flooded these newsgroups for over 18 months in a "mine is bigger than yours" pissing contest. You started it, and then others joined in, including Wiseman. I've been watching this whole fiasco since the beginning, and I know beyond any shadow of a doubt that you are a major reason for the problems in rrap. Robeson eventually responded in kind to your provocations, giving you what you so badly wanted -- attention -- while the rest of the users of the group were deprived of its reasonable use.

On several days, your combined posts exceeded 300 per day, and all of them were trash.

As far as you have been concerned, Mark, this newsgroup is solely about you and your vendetta, and so:

- You whine that someone attacked your sexuality when only you seem to think that such an attack has been made. You use the sexuality claim in the same way that others use the word "racisim" when it doesn't apply. You use your sexuality as a convenient, "poor me" kind of whine. You then make dozens of nonsensical followups to your imaginary assailent's posts.

- You followup to almost every post with a change in the subject line, again under the delusion that somehow you are righting a wrong done to you. You couldn't even keep yourself from changing the subject of the thread from which this was extracted, thanks to your lack of self control (If other posters restore a subject line you have changed, your subsequent behavior proves that you are delusional.)

I was going to add more paragraphs above, but then realized what is obvious: There is absolutely no point. You can't make an insane person see that their world view is out of whack with reality, and you, Mark, appear to be suffering from a true mental illness. Thus, there's really no point talking to you, and action must be taken instead.

The action now being undertaken by the moderated group proponents is in fact a response to your abuse. People will be able to go to a Usenet group which free of your spews and be able to talk to one another like true adults. You, Wiseman, and a few others can continue to thrash about in this cesspool you've made, but you won't be able to stink up yet another rec.radio.amateur newsgroup.

Good riddance.

Mark hijacks another topic. He punces.

Mark, you seem to be squirming a bit more now that someone has threatened to dig into your alleged military past. This is quite apparently causing you to feel uncomfortable. Hiding something, are we?
That you are a liar is a moot point. We ALL know that.

"Your submission has been rejected because it is off-topic in the newsgroup news.groups.proposals. This newsgroup is for the announcement, discussion, and development of active proposals for changes to the Big 8 hierarchies, as documented at <http://www.big-8.org/>. Discussion begins in news.groups.proposals

If you are talking about posts to news.groups.proposals being rejected, I'd like to point out that nobody on the proposed moderation team has any control over that group. If your posts are not reaching the moderators for some reason, who's falut is that? Or if the rejection messages are being lost after they are sent, who needs to look into that?

This has nothing to do with the proposed group or it's moderation team..

Ahhhh.. So you are getting rejection messages from them... Then the system is working correctly.

Again, I have no control over the Big8 moderation decisions, but I think I understand why this last post was rejected... Seems you where trying to engage the moderator in a debate about why he rejected your posts and they think that is off topic.

And of course, early on news.groups.proposals was dropped from the crossposted by one of the repliers, so most of the posts in these two newsgroups aren't even being seen by the moderators in news.groups.proposals

I don't know whether that was deliberate, or just cluelessness.

ANd if they are getting over there but being rejected, one immediate reason I can see as a possible reason is the quoting of the full message being replied to, which often includes the full text of previous messages, with only a line or two of "new material". That makes it really hard to grasp what is being added, or even that is being added.

But that isn't really a surprise, since that is some of the problem
we are seeing in the rec.radio.amateur.* hierarchy.

I gather news.groups.proposals has gone to moderated status (I don't remember it being so the last time I looked, years back) in order to keep existing feuds out of that newsgroup. But a lot of the replies here are that existing feud.

FInally, of course if people aren't posting with legit email addresses, and I don't know if that's the case, then the moderators can't reach the posters to acknowledge receipt of the post, or acknowledge acceptance or rejection of those posts.

You are wrong. Robesin has been an antagonist on RRAP for a decade.
That others stood by and let him attack, thread jack, and repeatedly accuse anyone who disagreed with him a liar, a homo, or a pedo is inexcusable.

I've probably exchanged "words" with several members of the moderation team over the years.

I certainly have no problems with any of them.

I believe the only ones who will are those who have issues with self-restraint, which is exactly why this newsgroup has become a cesspool.

I have been reading this newsgroup on and off for approximately 15 years and find your summary to be completely unsupported by the facts. I have no idea what distorted world view makes you defend Mark and what he has done in these groups, but you have been doing so against all odds for quite some time now. You apparently suffer from mind petrification (rocks in your head), and for that you have my condolences.

Dude,

Come on..

The rejection of your post has nothing to do with the team that submitted the RFD and I'd bet the moderator who did it has absolutely no past history or ax to grind with you.

You don't think that perhaps the content of your attempted posts is getting them rejected?

OR do you propose that there is some hidden agenda and conspiracy going on to get you and your ideas banned for some other reason? (Like your license class or something...)

Be reasonable man...

John, some years ago IN HERE I described what a Pro Programmer did as an "intellectual exercise" for himself. Perhaps 15 years ago or more; I let this acquaintence borrow my then-new Icom R-70 receiver for an "on-air test" using a simple audio filter and detector and TTL interface (which I tossed together at home) for a then-very-speedy 40 MHz clock PC. :-)

This acquaintence was intrigued by the problem of deciphering variable-length anything and was vaguely

related to his day job in setting up human interfaces for computers. It DID use "adaptive timing" although I don't recall those exact buzzwords. It DID adapt to both word rate, character spacing, and changes in ratio of dits v. dahs. It DID work, even on the ham bands (even then the primary source of morse code).

It was programmed in C, not the C++ common to today.
Assembler subroutines were short and the "housekeeping"
sort used in other programming tasks with an 80x86 processor. [the later derivatives culminating in the now-common 'Pentium' instruction set) weren't around yet] I am "not at home" with C and am stuck on Fortran (77 variety as used in MS FORTRN 5.1 which MS dropped some years ago...and will no longer work in Windows XP at the DOS level). I don't pretend to be a whiz at programming but am fairly proficient with Fortran as a high-level language. [hey, I'm after number-crunching, not "art" in programming...results quickly obtained without going into arguments over how to do it with whatever is the source code a la mode...:-)]

As far as I know, he never tried to market the program, not even add the ruffles and flourishes
of some fancy interface screen, just a common (DOS Level) instruction menu, nothing fancy. It worked and he satisfied himself. I saw the source code and wanted a copy (never got one) so that I could experiment with it, write it in Fortran or even convert it to the Apple][+ that was used once in a while. There just isn't any market (one that makes lots of money) for it now, hardly one back then.

>If you doubt me, call up a college and ask to speak to a instructor in >software engineering ... don't take my word for it.

They will NOT do that, John. Trust me. Their 'arguments' center around some cheapie box from MFJ
or whatever, the kind using old, classic, FREE routines adapted to a particular microprocessor.
I have yet to see ONE argument that bothers to take on the GUTS of such a reader...the dynamic adaptation to dit v. dah ratios, word rate, and (sure has hell)
what to do about transient impulses that make their way into the incoming storage register.

>But, take this bunch of ancient key tappers as any type of >software/algorithm experts? YOU HAVE TO BE KIDDING ME!!!

Tsk, John, the Morsemen will be mighty put-out by such words. Their ability in morse and subsequent "extra"

status (as amateurs) make them Masters of Radio! They cannot be argued with, only admired for the Mighty Achievements (including much paper with certificates suitable for framing).

Ned Lud would be proud of them and their fight on the side of deus ex machina. :-)

"Bang on" as the Brits say, Brian.

BTW, it took the FCC years to finally update Part 97 from its previously OBSOLETE CCITT document reference to the 'proper' ITU-T document. Even then the proper document, like the old CCITT one, describes a COMMERCIAL telegram protocol, not an amateur one.

A DEFINITON of WORD RATE is NOT DIRECTLY STATED in Part 97!
Perhaps two sentences could have been included to SET or FIX the word rate...but the FCC never included that. When that was 'discussed' in here by the morse mavens, they all pointed to Paris with an "everybody 'knows' that" kind of attitude.

Sam's original "code" was all NUMBERS. That's what was used in the first US telegram company (Washington DC to Baltimore MD, 1844). Five-number code groups representing "common" phrases of the 1800s. And, it was done with paper tape with an ink pen driven by an electromagnet.

Sam's financial angel, Al Vail, came up with the first true telegraphic code to represent letters and punctuation as well as just numbers. Sam was running out of numbers in his "code dictionary" and didn't have enough (or maybe patience) and the original morse code was NOT speedy...although it really, really outpaced the common rider-horse courier system for "overnight delivery" of that time. :-)

>Oh, well, it was a nice walk in the park. The PCTA folks arguments >were as imperfect as the code they send.

Tsk, tsk, Brian. By their own admission, all PCTA send Perfect Code! Much, much faster than 'we' can realize. :-)

But, in retrospect, all the PCTA had for "reasons" of retention of the code test amounted to mental conditioning (brainwashing) over years and years of League emphasis on that mode. They were subconsciously parroting all of it.

PCTA will NEVER, ever admit to ANY mental conditioning.
To them amateur radio was all about radiotelegraphy.
Before the turn of the new millennium, every other radio service had DROPPED OOK CW or never considered it when that radio service was created. Morsemanship is alive (and on life support) ONLY in amateur radio today. I say
"only" because a few olde-tymers in other radio services MIGHT be still using morsemanship but that is NOT what is the MAJOR MODE of communications.

Miccolis will jump in here and say I am "wrong" or "mistaken" (as is his usual ranting) but it is TRUE. Except for the die-hard (Bruce Willis wannabes?) morsemen in ham radio, morse code is DYING if not dead. THEY are the zombies, the "walking dead" who strut around pretending to be "champion ops in radio." Yes, "champion" in the time-frame of the 1930s. This is 2007, not 70 years ago.

I made an OBSERVATION, Carl. Looking at www.nocode.org every day for a week after the 15 Dec 06 FCC announcement.

Then why didn't it appear that soon on the "NCI website?"
One that us earthpeople could read? The ARRL was posting about it the same day!

Let's face it. www.nocode.org has been QUIET on everything concerning the no-code-test NPRM. All that's been there for months has been a couple of notices about "officials" of NCI.
Whoop-de-do. [it was like walking through a research library with nobody in it...]

Suddenly, comes "word" from the "Chief" of NCI on "important news!" Allegedly "immediately" (more or less) "reported."

Wow! High-tech! <insert a Robesin hyena-guffaw here>

You should have remarked about a fancy hotel with Internet connections in every room or something. You don't have a direct satellite telephone? [Iridium is up and working, ain't it?]

By golly, Carl, looks like you "joined the 'other side.'" What with the extra callsign and running (well, trying to) for office, and all the IEEE Standards committee work, you appear to be Greater than us ordinary earthpeople.

It's rather obvious to most readers that Heil has had a deep personality conflict with me in here, by all indications a deep, antagonistic attitude wherein he keeps on finding "fault" with everything I say...and has been doing so for years. Now you are doing the same thing.

Is that what Managers' Charm School taught you?

Well, what I've been saying for years has come to pass. Give someone rank-status-privilege and they become "better" than ordinary folk.

Gosh, maybe I should mention we were in Cabo for a shoot. [film, that is] Shoot, forgot all about it...:-)

Absolutely. Robesin has been a MILITANT antagonist since he got the first disagreement to his "hero" postings. He was
"Semper Fi-ing" all over the place eight years ago, a hero of
"seven hostile actions" yet behaved all the world as some

Many things, Brian. "Rape" has been there recently.

To look back on thousands of Robesin's postings, one would have thought it was ALL ABOUT Robesin...his UNPROVEN "military career," heroic "ER Nurse," "communications officer" in the TN State Guard, and now an alleged "major" in the TN CAP. Wow.
[a bored Ben Stein kind of "wow"]

For a while, EVERYONE who disagreed with Robesin got the "Putz" treatment. He wanted to charge scoutmasters as "pedophiles," threatened to "call authorities" to have his opponents "picked up." In general, it was the actions of someone deeply disturbed, one who could NOT take ANY negativism, however slight, without yelling he had been raped.

of those express an opinion on the proposed Moderated NG All Known procoders that have made statements on the Subject make satements in favour of the proposal. all Nocoder making a staement on the subject opoose

2 poster are not cleared defined in the data kh6hz has declared his support for the proposal and len anderson is a nocoder who has made a statement but has not expressed a difitve opion on the proposal althought from his previous coment It seem likely he opposes as well

frankly this sort of data makes it diffuclt to state that Code wars are over dispite no Code having won this round and th e battle preparing to move to HF itself where we see soon enought the results

Oh so your name is not Mark C. Morgan, you shouldn't lie to the FCC, that is a federal crime. Furthermore, your the kind of person that military service groups specialize in exposing. People like you who talk BS about a fantasy military service and then try to cover it up by saying you were some kind of covert op or specialist. One site indicates "Phonies often claim they have no military record because they were involved in covert operations and the government has purged the documents from the system to disavow their illegal activities.
Don't accept that." I dropped your name and provided a copy of some of your your BS posts about your supposed military service record to a couple of these groups, one group said they would check into it. I did not know this, but this group informed me that several states have laws on the books that it is a crime to lie about military service?
Punishable by several years in jail and fines.

Your wrong, don't need to commit a crime. Guess what dummy, ever hear of FOIA. Anybody can get your military service records from the DOD records center in St Louis, MO, under a Freedom of Information Act Request. Very easy to get.

medle??? what the Fk, your spelling is almost as bad as Lloyd's.
Isn't Medle some new fancy feast cat food that is advertised on TV???
I wouldn't need to "medle in what is none of your affair" if you would keep all this garbage off of a PUBLIC NEWS GROUP, but since you choose to post, I choose to commit.

But this time YOU made an off topic post and it was rejected. Leave it alone, Mark. Get used to the simple fact that you simply are not wanted

Will you stop your whining? Get it through your thick head once and for all that the proposed new group is to be concerned with Amateur Radio and NOT used to address your pro gay sympathies. You are not wanted there! Must someone bat you on your forehead with a two-by-four to make the point?
Go back to the Nim Board if you want to discuss that.
Now it is you who is flaming.

yes. Here, I hear long time hams who know and passed the morse code test, singing on the ham bands. These hams don't report the other hams for violating FCC rules by singing on the ham bands, yet these very same hams report cb operators they hear singing on the cb bands.

That shows what kind of people the hams are.

It seems clear to me how it works, but I helped write the RFD....

Um.. Just like your recent posts that where rejected by the Big8 moderator, the posts will be returned to you with hopefully a brief note as to why it is being rejected. This assumes you have a valid return E-mail address configured when you post.

If you disagree with the moderator's rejection, you may appeal via the administrative contact specified in the RFD.

Appeals are handled by a group of moderators who determine if the original rejection was in error. If your post passes muster in the second hearing, it will be approved and posted on the group.

If your post is not deemed acceptable on the second hearing, there is no further defined process except that of the Big8 RFD process, where you could try and get the moderation team replaced.

Is that enough information?

That's not true. I'll vote against it and you can hardly accuse me of being shut out since I left here years ago rather than waste many hours accomplishing nothing constructive. The reason being that this group is too polarized with no room for dissenting opinions. No moderation is going to be impartial because no moderators are impartial. Therefore, a moderated ng will not reflect the opinions of hams in general. Instead, they will reflect the opinions approved by biased moderators.

My advice is to go to googlegroups, yahoogroups, or any of the other *.groups and start your own moderated community/group there instead of trying to start your own moderated newsgroup on Usenet. It's a lot easier.

I would say that without people whose only objective is to stifle dissenting opinion gone, this would be a better newsgroup. However, we all know that people will post to both newsgroups and probably get banned for something that they posted here.

I had hoped that, once the code vs. no-code childishness was over, these ng's would be useful again. I'm beginning to see that I was wrong.

I'll try back here in a few years to see if things have improved any.

i recevied them 24 hr later without any real explantion of the problem still don't see how they were quote "off topic" does apear tif moderation in the proposed NG is like that in the propsoal gruop then it may well be impossible to bring anything where to accurately describe something one must be in some manner unpleasent

ok next question ow do the message get to a moderator ? that is do the Moderators get asigned them ramdomly or do they log in somewhere 9that
I don't need to know exactly where) and the moderator tathat log take em in order or does a moderator get to look and say I want to to moderate that one over there? sorry if that is hard to follow but lacking data I can't formulate a clearly one please try this gruop agin in few months the Procder are through crying and NoCoder are still waiting the very end of the matter

I am curious and doing reasearch on wether there is colaration of being for or against this NG and ones stance on code testing I respectly ask if you were either ProCode or Nocode or none of the

Oh, don't get trolled by Wabbit. Basically, he's calling Mark a cunt, and in the verb form, I think he's also calling him a cocksucker.

They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats. Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.
Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. They feel as if they can lie and then order the victims to get counseling in the gayblade, governmental, pro-choice tax leech counseling centers. I am one of those that were alleged not to exist. I've waited for over 10 years for code to go away before I would upgrade. However, I decided that, rather than waste time here, my efforts would be better spent actively trying to drag ham radio into the 20th century.

That being said. I see no benefit to a moderated group and would not participate in one. Self-moderation by all sides would go a long ways. Establishing a moderated newsgroup on policy defeats it's own purpose of providing open discussion.

Perhaps those who control the Big 8 will feel the same as myself. Perhaps they won't. Either way, it's of no real consequence since I have no interest in subscribing to such a newsgroup.

The technical details of how moderated news groups operate are freely available on the web and are controlled by the documents that network news readers and servers all must follow. I don't know what the RFP numbers are and I don't have time to research it.

In our case, messages will be moderated by a mixture of manual and automatic means using any method we (as the moderation team) decide.

Currently messages will be routed though some automatic checks and into a manual moderation process where they can be approved/rejected by any of the moderators at any time. Once approved, the message is automatically inserted into the local news group server and must propagate from there.

How long it takes before you will see your posting depends on a host of factors, many beyond the control of the moderation team. The only factor we could hope to manage it how long it takes to get posts approved. At odd hours (say 3 AM Central) it may be a number of hours before a moderator is available to review posts. We hope to find volunteer moderators around the world which will help.

Poor Mark finds this all so "exsaperating" that he could just stomp his toosties in "frutatoun". The Big Boys are proposing a new club and poor Mark is not a part of it. Is being ignored. He is acting much like a petulant little brat standing outside the locked door of the Big Boy's club house who plaintively whines, "Come ON, you guys. Let me in. Why can't I come in? You guys aren't fair. It's not fair! What did I ever do to you guys? I want in and I want in NOW! Come ON! You guys owe me a real explation and I demand that explation now!"

Watching Mark dance is SO entertaining.

You live in a world of illusion, Gollum, because the forces of darkness gather in the east near Schleck's Deep. He and his minions intend to cast you into the neither regions, and their plan is about to succeed.
Your voice will soon be heard by men no longer as you are cast into the endless pit of nothingness.

Have a wonderful day.

No, your wrong. It can be requested for any reason whatsoever. Check DOD's web site, you just have to make sure you put FREDOOM OF INFORMATION ACT REQUEST on the letter, and bingo the info is on its way.

Rephrase in english please, does not compute error error....

you have NO need to meddle in my life at all you should confine your coment to radio related topics you don't

This was once a place that you could do that, but because of people like you this NG is worthless. I'll be glad when they have the moderated group, then they will KF all of your posts, BTW I think I will volunteer

I think you are wrong, I believe that you are the target, I am not the one with thousands of cross posted dribble drabble posts, my posts may add up to a hundred in six years time, hell you did a hundred last week.

well thank you for at least being a bit more creative than normal but your recent obesstion with certainly make a lie your stament your claim it is not about me

certainly everything in your posting is about me or about other people personal attacks

frankly if they can truely assure that they can effectively stop crap like yours from geting through they may wel gain my suport

I think at the end of the day, the PCTA will have set themselves up a cliquey little newsgroup where they can exchange pleasantries, signal reports, and how much they are serving "thier" country. Coslo won't have had to write a single line of code... and Robesin will finally be shunned because his Sargeant at Harms purpose will be over.

bye-bye faggot!
you can stay here and post to yourself. after all, you can't go back to nimbusters or qrz. everyone else will be posting about ham radio in the new group and you can stay and play with the cb'ers and kooks.....BYE-BYE FAGGOT!

Automatic as in scanning for the usual bad words? Or a simple check on who is posting it followed by the assumption that some people are always on-topic and always "A-1 Ops?"

Would posts such as Robesin's "what it's like to eat my excrement from another mans genitals" pass muster?

Thanks.

if the mods can be believed then you will not be posting at leats not like that indeed the cowardly stakers like yourselfwill not make the cut and maybe I will get to post about radio rather than your Bullshit

all the ng has to do is convince they can and WILL stop the likes of you and they will have my support

It isn't about code, and nobody but you has claimed that it is. It is about USENET ABUSE AND THE PEOPLE WHO HAVE HAD ENOUGH OF IT! You are perceived as a gross abuser, along with several other people, and the intention is to establish a newsgroup where people like you can't carry out your abuse any longer.

Sorry, whiny boy, you are in the process of losing. People finally got fed up with your Usenet abuse, and they have taken action. In a few more weeks you will be history, because you won't be able to post to the new group. Your days of abusive Usenet behavior are coming to an end. So are Wiseman's, Robeson's, and a number of other abusers. Good riddance to all of you.

That's simply a restating of what I meant by "other Morse Code operators".

But that's not the only thing needed. Regulations can be written that make it harder to use some well-established modes.

For example, look what happened to plain old AM 'phone. Before the 1983-84 power rules change, hams could run up to 1000 watts input on

AM. With a plate- or collector-modulated Class C legal-limit final, that meant up to 750 watts or so of carrier output. With advanced modes, even higher outputs could be obtained at 1000 watts input.

But then the rules changed from 1000W DC input to 1500W peak output.
Which effectively lowered the AM power limit by 50% or more. AM'ers asked that there be the option of using either system - 1000 W DC input or 1500 W peak output - but FCC said no.

You're missing the point.

The statement you made about the code test and the statement I made about the written tests are essentially identical. That's the point I was making.

The US amateur written exams have been exclusively multiple-choice for over 40 years. That's not going to change.

> I'm beginning study

Does the FAA publish all of the questions and answers that can appear on the tests, complete with the correct answers pointed out? Can you take practice exams online for free? What score is needed to pass?

Do you see experienced aviation folks saying the pilot's license exams are too technical, and need to be simplified?

There is a big difference between pointing out deficiencies in license tests and methods
and denigrating newcomers. I do the former, not the latter.

Aviation is quite a bit different from amateur radio in many ways. For one thing, it's a lot more expensive, and potentially dangerous. A lot more judgement is needed for aviation, and what appears to be a minor error can turn into a disaster very easily. (Just look what happened to JFK Jr. because of an error in judgement).

The point is that passing the written exams does not mean the person understands the material.

Agreed - but what should those minimum requirements be? Does the current 35 question Technician written really test what a ham should know in order to operate 1500 watt output transmitters at (to use your excellent phrase) "meat cooking frequencies"?

Isn't amateur radio part of "today's real world"? Morse Code is part of amateur radio -
a big part.

They can if someone has an open mind to look at the facts.

So some people don't like the idea of learning skills. And some people don't like the idea of learning something for amateur radio alone.

> Testing for licensure is not about "making folks work for it" or the liberal

There has always been equal opportunity to get a ham license. Show up, pass the tests,
get the license.

Any test is composed of at leasst two components: the material and the method.
How well a test indicates the qualifications of the person tested depends on both.

IMHO, the material of today's tests is roughly equivalent to that of the old tests, updated for changes in the rules and commonly-used technologies. But the methods used today are not comparable to the old methods.

Which do you think is a better test of how well a person knows technical material:

Method A: The general areas of the test are announced by means of typical problems, shown in a manner different from the actual test format.

or

Method B: The exact questions and answers that may appear on the test are shown in a manner identical to the actual test format.

You live in a different world from everyone else. Clearly, you have not understood the intent of the RFD.

But I must admit one thing: I'm enjoying watching you twist slowly in the breeze. I'm gloating. I'm thinking about months and months of spew from you, and I know that you are finally getting what you deserved a long, long time ago.

I love it, and I'm gloating.

The more you hate it, the more I love it, and I'm really gloating big sweet.

When I say "ignore" computer CW, I mean that I ignore my own use of technology, not that I refuse to communicate with someone else who uses the technology. But why would someone use computer CW? What if everybody used computer CW instead of more suitable digital modes that the same computer can generate? What then would the world think of us :-)

Does it make a difference what the automatic scanning does? Right now, we are ready to moderate all posts by hand and are working on additional filters as necessary to lower the moderation load.

Your idea that we could have a pre-approval list for well behaved posters is a good one. I assist in the moderation of some very busy yahoo groups that use that approach. The first few posts from a new poster are moderated by hand, but once they establish a positive history the are allowed to post w/o moderator interaction. Of course any problem posts that make it though would get them put back into the moderation queue.

That really doesn't need an answer right? Can you say off topic?

Believe me, you want as much automatic moderation as possible. Because otherwise the newsgroup relies to much on human moderators, who have other things to do besides sit by the computer to moderate the newsgroup.
Off-load as much as you can, and then the humans can be used for the things that require human moderator intervention.

You're implying that there would be a list beforehand. But that list could be made quite rapidly after such a newsgroup was created, if it does get created. After a handfull of posts, the moderators can evaluate the whether or not a poster is actually going to be on-topic. Or, the posters will never go beyond a single post or two, which means there's little reason to put them on an automatic list. The point of the list is to automate the process, so the majority don't have to go through a human moderator (and I should point out that this would mean those human moderators aren't going to be fussing over the contents of the post, which some here seem so worried about). The point of the moderation is to get rid of the junk, not to limit discussion.

And if someone strays, then it's easy for the robomoderation to catch the stray, or a moderator to realize a post has slipped through that it shouldn't. So the person falls off the list, until they once again prove they won't stray off-topic.

So ultimately the people who have ruined these two newsgroups can get into the moderated newsgroup by being on topic and following the rules. Post a relative handful of times like that, and their on the list. ANd of course, the minute they revert to previous behaviour, they'll be caught and back to human moderation.

This is not a new process. So much of the detail has been worked out because there have long been some moderated newsgroups. And ultimately if you check them, you will see a variety of "culture" to them, each having a different style, just as unmoderated newsgroups can have a different feel from each other.

I play with computer CW because it is fun to mess with. I enjoy computers and I enjoy CW so putting them together was just another way for me to enjoy the hobby. I've written programs for keyboarding, computer iambic keying using a mouse for a key, receiving, auto-logging, canned messages, QSO storage ect. These are all Basic programs (most in QBasic, some in VB1) and likely not up to the level of the professional programmers here but still they were fun to write, test, modify and use. Then I've built interfaces or in some cases with my old boxes (like my Atari or my 386) modified the computer to key my homebrew tube CW transmitters directly.

What would most of the world think of hams who use computer CW? Well most of the world can't copy CW so no problem there. But of course most of the world can copy hams on 75M and RRAP. So what do you think they think??

As far as the US amateur radio license TEST it will be dead very shortly. But...but...but...the FLAME WARS over code USE

All we will have in here are the warmed-over, stale diatribes by

I think that freedom of speech is inherent to any open discussion. If you don't like what they have to say, you are under no compulsion to listen to them. I came and looked a few years ago and didn't like what I saw, so I moved on. I'd have to see how much bias the moderators have and I have to be honest with you, if they are regular posters to these ng's, serious doubts about their ability to be objective and judge each post on it's own merits or lack thereof.

I see the moderated ng's becoming the playground of one group or the other and gaining the respectability of being part of the Big 8 hierarchy. That is unless those who make the decisions realize what is going on. I notice no one has answered the question about why you guys don't just start a yahoo group or something along those lines. You don't really need permission for that you know and it's a lot easier. You can still have your own private playground and decide who gets to play in it.

I gave up on these two ng's long ago. However, I have hopes that now that the code debate has been decided, things will improve. Flame wars, name calling, and personal attacks are part of un moderated Usenet. Learn to deal with it, leave it along, or move to a moderated format. I have a really good set of filters to keep out most of the riffraff.

Those are about your only choices.

I don't think so, but I'll bet the Nun of the Above thinks you are ALWAYS in uniform, NEVER in a federal unit, and always after rank and status. That's all that Robesin seemed to be doing with is "volunteerism."

Notice that Robesin NEVER put up even so much as a snapshot of Him in uniform during his claimed EIGHTEEN YEARS of USMC active duty? Nothing. Nada. Nyet. Simple, he was never in such a "career" and has been bluffing everyone all along.

"Sergeant at Harms!" Good descriptive phrase of him! Fits like a glove (and not like the one that O.J. faked out his jury on).

The PCTA set themselves up as a cliquey little newsgroup elite over a dozen years ago. Nothing new there. They are going to be doing that for years yet...they were Masters of the Radio Op art and will never let anyone forget it. All must bow down before them as we NCTA were supposed to do before 15 Dec 06.

Nothing from FCC in today's Federal Register (Vol 72, Number 8).

Since the Register is not published on weekends or holidays, the next one won't appear until Tuesday, January 16.

Robesin has never threatened to have them picked up with a single phone

One point that some seem to miss is that the new NG will not replace RRAP. Both will exist, and people can post to both. The big difference is that off-topic comments and personal attacks will be removed from the moderated group.

I don't see what the big problem is.

One of the fundamental purposes/commitments of NCI was to be a single-purpose organization that would disappear when the Morse Code test went away. Job's done in the USA, it seems.

Well, let's see...

In the past few years, Carl upgraded from Tech Plus to Extra (aced the test, too.).
Traded his old 2x3 6-land call for a spiffy 2x1 3-land call. Did a lot of good anti-BPL work, too. Worked some good DX on HF with SSB, too. Now he's made a contribution to promoting the learning and use of Morse Code.
(not the test!).

Anything wrong with any of that?

There is an "external law" which ties all federal agency rulemakings to the Federal Register.

It's called the Administrative Procedures Act and it's Title 5 USC, Chapter
5, sections 511-599.

The Administrative Procedure Act (APA) is the law under which some 55 U.S. government federal regulatory agencies like the FDA and EPA (and FCC) create the rules and regulations necessary to implement and enforce major legislative acts such as the Food Drug and Cosmetic Act, Clean Air Act or Occupational Health and Safety Act (and the Communications Act, as ammended).

I'm sure that the delay (not abnormal at all) in publishing in the FR is just that - the bureaucracy.

True - but the APA requires that there be very good reasons for not giving the citizenry due and reasonable notice before new regulations take effect.

Your right why bother, you are so boring. I've posted under my real identifier many times, but I won't to you because your not worthy. Many of us post under an alias for various reasons. You see most of us have real families, careers, and a life, we don't need the complication, but for someone like you, who...shall we say is a ten percenter, you don't have much to lose.

No effort needed, your about as low as you can get, you've even settled to go with boys and hermas because you can't sustain a normal relationship with a woman, but who cares, I don't. It only became an issue because you try to play the bi-gay/disablilty/dyslexia card and mention it at various times in the NG.

So should you idiot, but I can't find any recent radio related post by your under any of you user names, but you can find several under mine, if you had the right information.

No, no confusion here, your posts speak for themselves.

Nevertheless, last post for a while, don't have any more time for your nonsense. Better get yourself on topic or you will be moderated off of RRAPM.

Well, Florida had Punce de Leon, and "show-na-to-va" is a tennis player, but he's too stupid to put two together in his own hand, so can you blame him for having to find friends on cognet?

Perhaps he'll find Tommy, who doesn't know what the Fountain of Youth is, either.

There was an old Bishop whose clucking
Confessed he knew nothing of fucking;
Forget a good boff,
He can't even fuck off,
So he just has to settle for sucking.

Ponce (edit this)

British slang. Sometimes spelled 'Punce'.

Meaning or translating to a dispicable person, or to beg or freeload off of.

Ex:
[used in the context of a dispicable person] "Jude is being such a punce lately..."
or [used in the context 'to beg or freeload off of'] "Oliver's just poncing your school work off of you..."

Vulgarity Yes at times even profanity at times certainly, the reduction of that and rest is benifit

but Cecil that is not the point given nobody want to naswer questions of the practical side of how madoeration is to take place It seem certainly possible if not likely that the abilty to agree will leave

what reaction could I expect to stament where I critzed the response of the ARS to Katrina as less than it it could have and less than I disater Mik Cors then ran off insisting I had no riight to state such and opinion and that it proves I" must Hate Ham radio"

the proposed moderators are people largely unknown to me Brain Burke is also not that familier with them. There are data points to suggest this could end up being nothing bt a good oleboys club You name on help keep me from simply coming to that conclusion and ignoring the matter but given what I have seen of "moderation on say QRZ and other boards On qrz it was entirely permited to call for the deaths of all NoCode since no particular target was name and all sort stuff in the from Class based attacks have been permited while many far milder statement have been moderated out of existance

an aisde Honestly I do think Ferman faked the glove bit although I think the glove was at one point OJ's I think it shrank and was given to Justin his son as I often got as a kid some very nice gloves that no longer my dad ferman thinking OJ was guilty planted to enhance their case. that sort was known to have heppened in INDY In in the Tyson rape case

knowing BB Hot ham as I do I will go out on limb and suggest that hsomething HE doesn't want happening nor do I indeed it is something I am afraid of happening since based on the long history of the poster I suspect it willbe abused

Nothing BTW has been mentioned about what will be done if?when (you are human) a screw up occours and somebody slips some peronal attack through?

to some that back and forth might seem to be simply part of the price

no it did need an answer

it's maker insits that it is not an attack since he insits it is simply a true statement, and true statement are not personal attacks

you answered my question of wether reference to people sexaulity were going to be permited . you hedged with an answer that "you hoped they without an understanding of how the moderator truly intent to proceed your gruop will not gain my support nor the support of others like BB will a statement we he can't be trusted around peotencail new hams will it be permited (as has been done sos and so remark should not even be considered since he lack the experence to make them

th seemingly on topic but clearly when you get into it off topic and misleading article

it might well be premited since in this case it is funny, in which I must ask if pointing out that it is misleading and (depending on the example) anoying or offensive to someone that mods did not consider be permited

as I have said I not altogther opposed to the proposal but the decision is IN the details and we are not getting the details

The rules concerning newsgroup creation are available on the web. Just do a google search on newsgroup creation or I can post it if necessary. The acronym "RFD" stands for "Request for Discussion." The process is not unique to only the rec newsgroups...there are seven others in the Big 8.

I have had tried to read though a lot of it but it gets rather confusing indeed the Intel person peron I am professional at imes gets suspious that it is intended to be confusing

but even after a few back and frth with a moderator on the proposal gruop I still don't what is off topic for that gruop in expressing resverations about a proposed memebr of the moderating gruop/

Well those "internet types" have co-opted the acronym.

Actually, I always wondered what "RFD" meant in reference to mail delivery, and I don't think I saw an explanation until I saw someone mention the meaning on the internet.

TEH WAY OF THE K00K
Never learn from your mistakes.
Always practice your mistakes; you may get them right.
Always pick on those smarter and tougher than you.
Always believe that only you know the TRVTH.
Never allow logic or reason get in the way of a good k00k.
When being overwhelmed by logic and reason: k00ksuit!
If you are going to be wrong, do it at the top of your lungs.
When caught in a lie: LIE!
When in doubt: Order the Crab Won Ton
Plagiarism is your friend. Use it.
Whenever contradicted; morph, start calling people names, and make false accusations. Include the children of your target in your allegations,

Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too

When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.
Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!
(9-Jul-05) Anytime your computer is infected with a virus, bogged down by spyware, attacked over your internet connection, or otherwise suffers from preventable problems, government agencies are responsible and are trying to silence you and are monitoring your computer files.

Scare your enemies with lawsuits, police escorts and whines.
Always back up your empty (albeit noisy) threats with phony LARTs, false police reports, and harassing letters to the FBI and other gubbermint agencies.
Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.

I guess it needs to be posted since so many seem to be unaware of the process evidenced by comments about discussion not being allowed. You are indeed allowed to post questions regarding the proposal and the proponents are required to answer your question. Just post your concerns as questions and not comments. They should go through.

It is interesting to note that discussions here should have follow ups set to go to the ng proposals ng. However, there seems to be an effort to keep that from happening. I guess that some people don't want those on the decision board to know about some discussions.

Please note that those on the creation board do not have a vested interest in the formation and probably do not post to these ng's. The process is designed to be as fair as possible and the ng created if their will be sufficient traffic to justify it and a need has been established.

I have no intention of using the ng's when created because I have serious reservations about the ability of the moderators to be impartial. Nuff said about that.

Here. I hope that this helps you understand the process a little better. If I were you, I'd just go with the flow. Ask any questions that you have about the charter, FAQ, and moderation over there. The proponents are required to reply to questions in a polite and informative manner and the BS experienced here will not be tolerated from either position. Sometimes, moderation is a necessary evil.

Here...hope this helps you understand the process at least.

1. Informal Discussion
Anyone wishing to propose a newsgroup may do so simply by posting a message to that effect in news.groups or by writing the Big-8 Management Board or one of its committees. There are no requirements on the format or content of that message. For example, ï¿½Yo, dude, a surfing newsgroup would be WAY COOL!ï¿½ would be a perfectly fine way to initiate a discussion. Of course, more information is always welcome, but it is not required at this point in the process.

The idea is to get ideas out in the open quickly, where they can be discussed and fleshed out before the formal RFD is written.

The proponent of the newsgroup ought to cross-post the idea to other, relevant newsgroups in addition to news.groups. In these cross posts, follow ups should be directed to news.groups so that discussion of the idea is confined to a single location. This makes it easier for interested parties to follow the entire discussion in one place, and for uninterested parties to avoid the discussion simply by staying out of news.groups. However, this is merely a recommendation ï¿½ the proponent should do what s/he feels comfortable with during the informal discussion of the proposal.

The proponent may choose to conduct an interest poll during the informal discussion phase. See the notes on Traffic Analysis for further information.

Proponents who have experience with the newsgroup creation process and believe that they have a well-developed idea may skip the informal discussion and start with step 2, the RFD.

2. Request for Discussion (RFD)
The proponent submits his/her proposal to the newsgroup news.announce.newgroups by posting to the group or by emailing the proposal to news-announce-newgroups@moderators.isc.org. This submission is known as a Request For Discussion, or RFD.

The RFD should be cross-posted to newsgroups whose readers might be interested in or affected by the proposed group. It should also be cross-posted to news.groups.proposals, and followups should be directed there. (If you do not know how to set followups in your newsreader, we will help you figure it out. The line that needs to be included in the RFD header field is ï¿½Followup-to: news.groups.proposalsï¿½.)

Some information is required in the RFD:

newsgroup name
Checkgroups file entry
whether the newsgroup will be moderated or unmoderated
if moderated, who the initial moderator(s) will be, including their contact addresses
Some information is not required, but is strongly encouraged:

rationale
charter
moderation policy, if moderated
Other information which supports the creation of the newsgroup may be included. For example, this could include:

traffic analysis
moderation site and software
Each of these items is discussed in greater detail here.

As discussion of the RFD progresses in news.groups, the proponent should submit revised RFDs to news.announce.newgroups et al.

3. Discussions of the Proposal in news.groups.proposals
News.groups.proposals is a moderated newsgroup in which Big-8 newsgroup proposals are discussed. We ask proponents and others interested in a proposal to subscribe to news.groups.proposals for the duration of the discussion period and, so far as possible, to bring the discussion of this group elsewhere into n.g.p. by using the ï¿½Followup-to: news.groups.proposalsï¿½ header along with a line in the body of the post saying ï¿½Followups set.ï¿½

All discussion of active proposals should be posted to news.groups.proposals. If desired by the readership of closely affected groups, the discussion may be crossposted to those groups, but care must be taken to ensure that all discussion appears in n.g.p. The purpose of the discussion is to evaluate all of the elements in the RFD: name, charter, rationale, traffic analysis, moderation policy, moderators, distribution list, etc., along with other concerns about how the topic fits into the Big-8 and Usenet as a whole.

It is very important that proponents answer questions about their RFD in news.groups.proposals. Failure to participate in the discussion will result in the proposal being removed from the active queue. At the same time, proponents who are responding to reasonable questions and requests for clarification may use their discretion in not responding to repetitious or contentious questioning.

As a general rule, members of the Board are expected to follow the discussion in news.groups.proposals. Members of the Board who wish to do so may participate in the discussion either to express their personal views or to clarify matters of policy and procedure.

The Board may, at its discretion, conduct polls of various kinds to help settle the question of whether the group should be created. Proponents may also initiate polls to show that creating the group is desirable.

4. The Proponent Asks the Board Make a Decision
When the proponent is ready for the board to make its decision, he or she should submit an RFD/Last Call For Comments to news.announce.newgroups. The Board may also take the initiative to suggest to a proponent that the time has come to end the discussion and make a decision on the proposal.

If the board believes that the proposal is ready for a decision to be made, the Board will publish the RFD/LCC under its own name. The RFD will announce that the Board will begin voting after 5 days, and that interested persons should make any final comments that they wish the Board to consider when making its decision.

Alternatively, the board may request that the proponent make additional changes to the RFD/LCC, or supply additional information; or they may request that the proponent continue to discuss the proposal in news.groups.proposals.

5. The Board Votes on the Proposal
The Board will decide whether the new group will be created. In making its decision, the Board will use its standard voting procedures.

The Board will wait five days after the Final RFD and Last Call for Comments is issued before beginning to vote. After the five-day period, the Boardï¿½s vote may take one to seven days.

If the Board decides not to create the new group, the Boardï¿½s announcement of the decision will include an explanation of why the proposal was rejected. Furthermore, the Board will explain to the proponent, either privately or in the decision announcement, what, if anything, he or she can do to improve the proposal before asking the Board to reconsider it.

6. If the Proposal Passes, It is Implemented
The Technical Team will take responsibility for properly formatting and circulating the request to create the new group. This formal request will be archived at the ISC website.

Of Iridium? No, Carl. I have no need for any wireless wireless computer connection I would buy the components and connect it up. Plenty of that equipment available at

Thank you for that information, Carl. Should I spread word to the entertainment industry in Los Angeles? Although I think they already KNOW all of that here. [just a hunch]

Oh, yes, in case you've not heard, a "shoot" has many meanings among the pros doing TV and film work around here...and in Vancouver, BC. Lots of quaint old terms still persist in the entertainment industry...but you KNOW them all, don't you? Of course you do...you will remind us by telling us all what they mean...after all,
you are a code-tested amateur extra and KNOW everything.

BTW, the "Cabo" I mentioned was "Cabo Tan Lucas" on Victory Blvd in Burbank, CA (half a block from Hollywood Way a north-south major street). A tanning salon, now under a different business name. :-)

Oh, and Carl, there's roughly 2 to 3 production companies shooting on location somewhere in the Los Angeles area every workday (and many Saturdays). Ah, but you KNEW that, didn't you, Carl? Of course you did, you are a code-tested amateur extra and KNOW those things.

Nice talking to you, Carl...

Somebody on the team pointed out to me that the submission address in the RFD is currently active... So if you want to see how this would work you can send a test posting to the submission address.

Of course the proposed news group doesn't exist yet so we have to send the posts to something else. In this case it goes to misc.test.moderated. I just tested it to be sure it still worked and it does.

I'll be happy to approve or reject some short test messages as you wish.. Just indicate in the test messages what you want to happen with it. We actually welcome the ability to test submissions from folks beyond just us so please give it a try.

Remember that the moderation team is limited and we are not fully "on line" and watching the inbound queue for postings as the proposed group does not exist yet so the approval/rejection delay may be a bit longer than it will be when we are up and running for real.

Carole is really a 54 year old baldheaded asshole named Steve Johns who rents money to live in some guy's attic. The only carol in his head, unless you count Dave, who have one trolling character named "Carl". Maybe he gave his "Carl troll" personlity a "sex change"? There's no Bob in Bob and Carole. Please, I've been stuck watchking this shit for years. Bob is really named Steve, and he ought to knock the shit off and quck.

Considering the FACT that Mark posts hundreds of times to Steve's occasional post, the "problem" exists solely in Mark Morgan's jumbled noggin'.

It is common and polite practice to use the the expanded phrase in the first useage with the acronym in parenthesis. Then to use the acronym thereafter is appropriate.

It's kind of funny watching all the anonninnies getting in their last licks before having to go straight.

Somebody who has one and who knows Morse Code tells me it says:

"PERSONAL RELIABLE INNOVATIVE SIMPLE INNOVATIVE PERSONAL DESIGN RELIABLE INNOVATIVE DESIGN PERSONAL DESIGN SIMPLE INNOVATIVE SIMPLE RELIABLE DESIG"

There was no room for the final "N" in "DESIGN".

Hmmmm....

"PERSONAL RELIABLE INNOVATIVE SIMPLE DESIGN" - applies to both the product and Morse Code!

I did not know that! Thanks Carl!

It makes perfect sense that there would be legislation requiring the publication of routine new rules in the Federal Register before they become effective.

Agreed.

Also, after having made a couple of obvious typos and contradictions in the "omnibus" R&O, FCC might be taking extra measures to be sure that sort of thing isn't in this one.

Those emergency declarations are the exceptions that prove the rule

Morse Code also has artistic and architectural uses.

The Canadian War Museum in Ottawa has Morse Code on and in the building:

http://noignorance.com/images/OTTAWA-2006-war-museum.jpg

http://www.legionmagazine.com/img/05-05/05-05museum2.jpg

In a series of small windows, the building spells out in Morse code:

"Lest We Forget / N'oublions jamais".

http://www.gaywired.com/images/contentimages2005/1214.jpg

Morse code is also reflected through the walls from the Open Storage Facility leading to the foyer, spelling out the museum initials in English and French. On sunny days, "CWM" and "MCG" will be projected in Morse code into the building, visible to all.

Again, it is NOT what you are concerned about, Mark. Get it through your obtuse skull once and for all. Usenet is NOT about you or what you approve or disapprove of.

My programs both send and receive CW. But I don't use computer CW all that often anymore. These days my favorite way to work CW has become laying back in my big recliner relaxing with my eyes closed. A computer would just be in the way. I've found that In CW as in life position can greatly improve the endeavor... ;)

Actually, I don't wonder that. I do understand that you do. I can live with that. You've been made to look foolish because you didn't recognize your own error. As you are fond of writing about me, you've stumbled and skinned your knee on your own mistake. Your "Heil Dave!" comment didn't work with your "demoracy" and now you feel the need to lash out.

Go figure!

Enough with the "demoracy"; let's go for demoronization.

I like doing that too. I mostly listen to CW QSO's in a relaxed mode, like you. It is very enjoyable!

The reason I asked the question is because the Part 97 technicalities seem to raise some interesting issues. For example, when using such programs, does the radio actually transmit A1A does it transmit SSB with the analog sound card output connected to the mike input? I believe it is usually (but not always) the latter.
"CW" by FCC definition (for band allocation purposes) is A1A only.

Using a sound card output or modem that is electrically coupled to the mike input, I believe one would be transmitting suppressed carrier SSB AM, not A1A but more likely J3A or J3B (if the code is super fast).

In any case, with such programs one might technically be receiving A1A CW but transmitting sideband carrier modulated data. That is legally OK since the CW sub-bands also allow "digital" (transmitted in an analog fashion), which would comprise both the carrier modulated modes and the phase shift modulated modes (like psk31 etc.).

If the computer used acoustic coupling from speaker to mike, (perhaps using the VOC as the PTT switch), I believe that would not be legal on the CW sub-bands; that would be classified as J3E voice. One cannot hold the mike to the computer speak, press PTT and transmit.

My reading would be, computer "CW" (with sound card output electrically coupled to mike input and does not operate true A1A), is still legal in the

CW sub-bands provided the data coupling from computer to radio is electrical and not acoustic.

Actually, I would think acoustic coupling has superior protective isolation between radio and computer, better than toroids and optocouplers. Why should it make a difference legally? Because the FCC has these definitions, you see. The technology with the best isolation is also illegal to operate on the CW sub-bands as soon as anything in the circuit is reduced non-EM waves (sound). It becomes J3E (voice).

Although electrically coupled J3A and J3B are legal in the CW sub-bands, one should observe the gentlemen's agreements in the band sharing plans and transmit computer CW that uses J3A and J3B only in the appropriate sections, not in the entire sub-band as A1A is permitted to do.

This would imply, of course, that computer programs for CW are not acceptable (even if legal) across the entire CW allocation unless the output actually "keys" the CW carrier. They are NOT equivalent to CW.

Most CW computer programs are set up so that for transmission you set the radio to CW mode and then run a line from a computer serial port to the straight key jack on the radio. Therefore you are using an actual A1A transmission. Right off hand, I don't know any CW programs that feed a tone into the mic jack although I suppose there could be some out there.

On the other hand, there was a time when some commercial SSB rigs did use an injected audio tone to send CW. Whether or not they actually sent A1 would have been determined by the purity of the tone oscillator, and the carrier suppression and unwanted sideband suppression of the sideband rig.

A more common occurance was RTTY, when AFSK was often used to send FSK on an SSB rig. (I suppose it was more common since it was easy to unbalance a balanced modulator and just key a stage for an SSB rig, especially when it came from the factory that way, while commercial rigs did not tend to have built in FSK ability and of course frequency shifting often resulted in slight variation of how much shift occurred depending what you modified and what you shifted. And of course, it was easier to inject an AFSK generator into the sideband rig than mess with frequency determining elements in the rig.) Nobody really thought badly of this practice, so long as it provided a decent sinewave.

LIkewise, SSTV always (well maybe not in recent years, I don't know) be done by modulating an audio oscillator, and then feeding it into the mic input of the SSB rig.

With good supression of the carrier, good suppresion of the unwanted sideband, and a pure enough audio oscillator, the only thing that would be noticed about the output signal would be that the dial of the transmitter doesn't directly show the transmitted frequency, since of course the carrier isn't being turned on and off, an audio oscillator is so it provides an offset.

This is precisely why two-tone oscillators are needed for testing SSB transmitters. Because only then are you actually modulating the output. Otherwise, it's just a carrier.

Thanks Dee. I was thinking the situation was otherwise but I never really looked into what people were actually doing with the hardware.

Here is a really simple A1A keyer for non-hams (it seems to be aimed at kids) that ressurrects Morse and even encourages them to memorize it rather than building a Morse decoder on the other end. You use it to transmit from your serial port directly to the AM commercial band (10000 Khs) and the other side listens on a commerical AM radio. Any guesses as to the range? I suppose it is legal due the ultra low power. Yes, it is elementary...but seems more like being like a "ham" than some of today's licensed amateurs :-))

Other than enjoying high growth with the disabled, is the future of Morse with young non-Ham experimenters?

Yes, they are. Or rather, they can be.

If you have an ideal SSB transmitter, and you feed an ideal sine-wave audio tone into it, you get a pure carrier output. Key the ideal sine-wave audio tone, and you have a keyed carrier.

Now of course if the SSB transmitter or the sine-wave isn't ideal, you wind up with unwanted outputs, such as the suppressed carrier or the unwanted sideband. How much suppression is needed is another matter, but I suspect that with modern methods the unwanted products could be kept low enough not to make any difference.

The big question is whether the signals (keyed carrier vs. keyed audio tone) look different on a spectrum analyzer. If they don't, why should FCC care?

A troll? Not according to him, he's not. The poor, deluded dyslexic is actually convinced that he is defending what he calls his "honor" against a plethora of unseen attackers. Mark is not unlike Roger Wiseman. Like Roger who sees Lloyd behind every tree and around each corner, Mark sees Steve Robesin in every shadow and behind every post. Mark is quite obviously obsessed with Mr. Robesin, just as Roger is with Lloyd Davies.
We've all watched when Robesin makes a handfull of posts every few weeks and Mark goes ballistic by replying to the posts hundreds of times and for weeks afterward.

Go ahead and complain, though it will do little good. In fact, this clown actually thinks that he is helping to clean up the newsgroups when quite the opposite is true.

And wouldn't it be A2? Or have they tossed out that designation?

A2 was/is an audio tone into an AM transmitter.

It's what's used for the "code" function on all those old "no license required" 100mW 27MHz walkie talkies with the code keys. It has the advantage that you don't need a BFO at the receiver end.

ANd of course, there was that period in the US when the 2M phone privilege went away for the Novice class license, but A2 continued to be allowed, presumably because all the cheap AM transceivers had no means of sending CW.

...offset from the (nulled) carrier frequency, by the pitch of the audio tone.
LSB: 7.025 MHz - 440 Hz = 7.02456 MHz.
USB: 7.025 MHz + 440 Hz = 7.02544 MHz.

And, for decades, it's been exceedingly simple to create a very low distortion sinewave at audio frequencies. Prior to digitally synthesized oscillators, the best known was (is?) a Wien Bridge oscillator:

I'm getting the feeling that frogging Mark is a joint effort between the

Is there a reason you don't answer my questions?

Do you know the answer, or do you have a problem with me, or my question?

How nice. Now can you answer my question?

You are mistaken. It was not a suggestion, but another question.
Absolutely do not attribute that "idea" to me as a suggestion.

It does need an answer because I have asked a legitimate question. If you're having problems answering legitimate questions, I suggest you remove yourself from moderatorship, no matter your claims of superb moderatorship on yahoo.

Now back to the subject. By using "genitals" and "excrement" instead of street language, Robesin would have passed the first, gross filter. And by posting several legit posts first, and being on the "approved" list, Robesin could easily slide some sick, off-topic material into the group.

So, do you have any answers, or do I need to communicate with someone else?

I have never used the mike input for computer CW. My homebrew CW transmitters don't have a mike input. I key the transmitter directly from a computer port driving a keying relay. In my programs I use Basic POKE statements to access the computer ports directly.

Another crybaby/Mark Morgan sympathizer has joined the fray.
What part of 'Robesin has not posted in weeks' do you not get, Billy?
Perhaps, just perhaps, were Mark to cease pointing out that he is bisexual (and proud of it), the ugly comments would cease. Of course that is not a likely scenario now, especially in light of the fact that Mark continues to post links to his blog wherein he openly admits to his bisexuality.
He brought this upon himself. On the same hand, Mark's proclivity for posting hundreds of times a week and intruding in conversations (notwithstanding his habit of hijacking topics) in which he is not welcome has nothing to do with others disliking him, does it?
You, like Mark, are opting instead to place onus of blame on an occasional poster while using him as a scapegoat for whatever mental ailments the two of you suffer from.

For a while there I thought you were brighter than Mark...a "step above", so to speak. I was obviously wrong.

Just FTR, members of AAM, AUG, and alt.homosexual should be aware that the above is not actually Mark C. Morgan, but his frogger (note the non-replyable addy), who is up for Coward of the Month, January 2007, has previously won the Joseph Bartlo Pathetic Anal Pineapple, and may or may not be Roger "Woger" Wiseman, though you may feel free to consider that a default, as he is known for his frogging ways.

Anyone wishing to complain that this post is not relevant to their group should also note that the same goes for the thread (meaning, I really don't give a fuck), and they should have killfiled it weeks ago. Google Groupers are kindly invited to get a real newsreader, or else a life.

Doltism seems to be your strong point.
Other than that, you have no redeeming values.

I'm afraid that your use of AOL to impersonate Mark is obvious, as Actually, no. Robesin went stalking Mark on the internet and brought back to RRAP subjects which were not appropriate for discussion on RRAP. To quote the moderator, it was "off topic."

It's called "out-assholing" Robesin. Very nasty stuff.

Robesin is laying low for some unknown reason, probably to trick fools

We'll see. The new group just might become a single, monthly posting from Miccolis on the number of amateur operators. I wonder if that will be on-topic?

I think in this circuit pin 4 of the serial port connects to the power input of the oscillator cihip. The oscillator 1MHz "carrier" is truely keyed on and off, thus it is A1A.

It wasn't always that way. At one time attribute forging, thread-jacking and avalanches of postings were the exclusive domain of Robesin. What you are witnessing now is Robesin's tactics turned against Robesin, i.e., "out-assholing" Robesin. Don't like it? You've had almost a decade to speak up, and didn't. Best of Luck.

If you'll go back up to "Loyd's" response to my last post, you'll see where he couldn't resist forging the attribute chain. That Robesin is posting everyday is a given.

Well, I see this sort of thing as a disruption of the group. However, there was a valid purpose for it and it seems to be working. Robesin as Robesin has all but disappeared, or rather has been driven underground to post his bile as an anonnie. Nevermind that Robesin as Robesin has posted chapter after chapter about how despicable anonnies are. He is a man without conscience.

I agree that it doesn't matter to the FCC as long is the keyed audio tone is coupled to the radio with EM waves such as with light (optoisolators), RF or wires (electrical connections).

However, if you couple the keyed audio carrier acoustically, speaker-to-mike using only sound waves, then that is J3E and only permissible in the voice portion of the band.

If I were to whistle nearly pure sine waves (I am a good whistler, perhaps you have seen paintings of my mother :-)) in Morse code into the mike input, it might look like CW and sound like CW but it would really be J3E, hence illegal in the CW sub-bands.

Using acoustic coupling (J3E), it becomes a slippery slope; first computer generated tones, then human whistling, then humming and before you know it, "talking" (di dah di dah etc.. and finally, "words" :-))

But it could never be A1, because it doesn't meet the criteria of a pure tone into a good SSB transmitter.

I doubt however good a whistler you are, that you can guarantee it's a sine wave and doesn't include any peripheral noise. And that microphone is bound to pick up background noise, so you aren't sending a CW signal.

Also, the speaker and microphone, if putting a tone oscillator into the transmitter that way, may add distortion to the tone, which then means you don't have a CW signal.

If it looks and sounds like CW, then it is CW. But your examples aren't about sending CW, because you'd be sending peripheral audio along with the tone.

In other words, it's the results that matter. You can't get those results with a microphone, and that's why it's not CW.

I admit I didn't look at the link before, but having done so, they are talking about a choice, modulating the oscillator with one of two audio frequencies, or just on-off keying.

Since they are using one of the control lines of the serial port, rather than the serial data line, they have full control (well depending on the operating system) over that line, so they can switch it at a low rate, for CW, or switch it at a fast rate such as 1KHz, and then doing that on and off to match the code's on and off.

My expectation that it would be A2 is based on the simple fact that the average AM radio doesn't have a BFO, and trying to decipher CW without a BFO is difficult at the very least.

Hence, any project for building a "CW transmitter" in the AM broadcast band (and the FM broadcast band for that matter, though I don't recall seeing any of those) would be keying an audio oscillator that modulates an RF oscillator, so you could hear it in the radio. It's been like that since 36 years ago when I built one for a science project, and long before that.

That webpage does acknowledge that you can send straight CW, but then you'd need a receiver with a BFO, I think they said "expensive shortwave radio".

Scare your enemies with lawsuits, police escorts and whines.
Always back up your empty (albeit noisy) threats with phony LARTs, false police reports, and harassing letters to the FBI and other gubbermint agencies.
Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.

(17-Mar-05) When dealing with law enforcement, remember that it is they who have the problem, not you. Be sure to inform them of this at every available opportunity, as they will surely appreciate your constructive criticism. Be sure to make them aware that YOU KNOW YOUR RIGHTS! ("The cops like that, when people know their rights. That way they don't have to read them to you on the way to the station." - George Carlin)

The more your fake personalities adulate you, the more respect you'll get!
When confronted with a reality that you don't like: Announce loudly that you are departing, never to return as long as there's an Internet.

Come back in three or four days and claim you were drunk, hacked, abducted by alience, or forged. Alternately you can just not even mention your prior departure, and if anyone asks you about it, either ignore them or respond with something along the lines of "YOUR NOT THE BOSS OF ME! PLONK!" People really know you mean business then.
Always remain clueproof.
(20-Mar-05) Anyone who does not believe that you are the reincarnation of [$DEITY_OR_PROPHET] is obviously an infidel lacking in faith whose soul in in peril of everlasting damnation.
When responding to one line challenges, post paragraphs of rants and screed in response.

Incoherency is not a roadblock to poasting.
Neither is illiteracy.
Delusions poasted often enough become fact.
Claim you will destroy <insert newsfroup> for attacking you.
When spnaked, send cmsg for Fanboi newsfroup(s).
Find your Lame, Use your Lame, Be your Lame!
Post Edit when the TRVTH hurts.
Always sneck the offending newsfroups.
Always poast pictures of yourself so you can be admired in all your k00ky
glory.
Always accuse others of the very acts you are guilty of.
Post lots of boasts about your high IQ and incredible talents.
(20-Mar-05) If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth.
Anybody who fails to understand this is engaged in a deliberate campaign
of misinformation and character assassination.
Always <plonk> somebody just before replying the plonkee!
The k00k considers itself the most intelligent person in any conversation, possibly on the planet. Other people are benighted and ignorant, and have been waiting their whole lives for the k00k to rescue
them from intellectual darkness.
Write a self-published book and claim it a success. Bonus points for comparing it to "Mein Kampf" and/or the Bible.
Declare yourself equal to a deity of your choice.
Claim that you've come from other planets.
Claim thousands of past lives.
Frothing complaints carry far more weight when you send them from "legal@" some domain.
Nothing strikes terror into the hearts of your detractors more than telling them that you're archiving their messages for possible use in the future.
Never forget that everyone else posting to Usenet is a paid disinformation agent looking to discredit you.
Usenet is governed by US law. If a poster in Romania killfiles you, he's obviously violating your 1st Amendment rights and can be sued.
Every news admin in the world hangs out in NANAU, and they're just dying
to nuke the account of that meanyhead who just called you "fucknozzle".

Drop 'em a line - that's what they're there for, after all.
AUK will be closed down. Just you wait and see.
They've nuked hundreds of accounts in the name of free speech and yours will be next.
The k00k will, without any trace of irony, lie, manipulate, impersonate,
censor, and declare themselves powerful in ways ranging from the ability to have ...

No, the word is fuck*head*, as in "AUK fuck*head*". Get it right, though
you may omit the asterisks.

Then I suggest you go into a public place, perhaps a grocery store, a nightclub, let everyone you see know that you are a pedophile by telling them to their face.

Report back here and tell us what happened.
Odds are that you wouldn't even survive more than 10 minutes, someone would end up taking you out real fast or at the very least beat you into a coma.

Stay stupid, pedophile...

Right, when I know that the only creature on this Earth with less brains than you is a mob? Anyone can upset a mob ...

Why don't you try going into the same grocery store and tell how you advised someone who claimed to be a 17-year-old boy to commit suicide?

I can tell you what they'd do and think - nothing. They either wouldn't take you seriously (even if you buggered a child under their noses) or they'd laugh you off as being crazy.

Fact is, people don't usually want to get involved.

Because of my, um, situation, I've studied the dichotomy of large groups and small ones - and "groups" consisting of one to three people.

If you ask a group of people to help you in a bad situation (lost dog, lost child, etc) they won't do a damn thing - if you ask a "small: group - they usually will. The smaller the number of individuals, usually, the more they will react.

Case in point: several years ago, several men raped a woman in the back of a bar (though it's happened more often than you think, the movie with Jodie Foster, "The Accused" was based on one account, though loosely) . . . out of approximately 20 people in the bar, only 4 men raped her. Why only the four? Why didn't the other men who WATCHED it happen do anything? It helps if you look at the group of men raping the woman as one group and the watchers as a second group.

The group of men that raped her was very small - one man began the assault and the others joined in. While the other, larger group, did nothing. I've honestly come to the conclusion (though skewed, I admit) that people are basically "herd animals." The smaller the group, the more likely it is that a single person will act like the "mind" of the group and the small group will adopt that mindset. The larger the group, the less likely that a single person will act on their intentions/desires/inclinations.

Now obviously, that doesn't include the situations where people, of their own volition, form a group - such as when a child is lost, and individual people come to merge with others.

> Why don't you try going into the same grocery store and tell how you > advised someone who claimed to be a 17-year-old boy to commit suicide?

Same thing as above - they may think about doing something awful to that person, but unless it's a small group and ONE person begins to "do something" - nothing will actually occur.

Obviously, in both situations, if there is a person who has experienced either their own child being molested or their own child committing suicide, it's quite likely that THEY will have a reaction that the others might "feed on" and the entire group might act. But I think that both occurrences are so rare that it wouldn't be the case.

You have some good points -- I make similar points in another post.

My only disagreement with you is that you can easily turn a large group into an angry mob by pushing the right buttons -- and fear is usually the best button, fear of the "horrible, stranger pedophile," for example, since nothing inspires anger more readily than fear.
There are other examples -- Hitler's appeal to his "master race" and the subsequent national obsession. The activities in NYC during the black outs of the 70's, the Watts riots ... there are more, of course!

I disagree that it would be the "fear of the horrible, stranger pedophile"
so much as the fact that (assuming the statistics are correct and 1 in 6 adults experience some form of "inappropriate sexual contact" as a child),
at least one member of the "mob" is likely to harbor some anger and/or resentment towards his/her abuser (please note that if it weren't abusive,

there wouldn't be any anger/resentment so don't give me that 'not all contact is abusive' because that's not the point here) and that person
is likely to be more agressive out of anger rather than fear.. at least
that has been my experience when I've mentioned "pedophiles" in a bar setting..

(I hope that makes sense... I got interrupted twice while typing it up
and
I'm all hopped up on cold medicine.. :)

I disagree.. but I already posted why in my response to as400.. err wait... 4s400th I mean lol

I mentioned "pedophiles" in a bar just Monday and I thought this one guy was going to explode - he started ranting and raving about how they should all be killed and then went on to tell me the story of how he was abused as a child.. given the statistics, I don't think finding people
of
his mindset is going to be such a "rare" occurance..

That's okay, I'm always on narcotics because of chronic pain -- sometimes moreso than others, though!

I used the "fear of the horrible, stranger pedophile" merely as an example. Certainly you have a valid point -- and I absolutely detest anyone who would tell someone who feels like they have been abused that "it" wasn't abuse. No, it isn't always abusive, but if the person feels abused, then "it" probably was abuse.

But the point about the "stranger pedophile" is that the hysteria over pedophiles tends to ignore that the majority of CSA is done by people the child knows and trusts. And, in their hysteria over the "Strangers" people are doing really stupid things and thinking they are making their children safer, when they don't even understand the actual problem and, thus, are doing nothing about it.

I think the setting matters . . . I could see someone in a bar reacting with fury more than the grocery store - why? Maybe kids are present and adults DO tend to monitor their behavior better in front of kids (sometimes, even in front of what they perceive as "ladies" - but then,

I'm southern, LOL).

Too . . . a bar? Well, considering the emotional impact that molestation would effect, I think that alcohol abuse is prolly pretty common for victims - you know, trying to drink the pain away? Lord knows I've been known to abuse alcohol for less . . . but anyway, so I think that in a bar setting, you're more likely to come across someone that's HAD that kind of pain and more likely to VENT it. Especially more so than in a grocery store, where there might be kids, women, etc

. . . and too, how many people were in the bar? If it were more than 20 _nearby_ (not just IN the bar, but close to the person) I'll bet he wouldn't have said a single word.

That's speaking from a man's POV - meaning a MAN would be more likely to try to do something in a group setting - I think a woman would leave and wait outside quietly and fucking mace someone . . .

But I really think that people just don't fucking react to shit in large group settings. I once saw a woman getting smacked around in a grocery store with about 30 people in the lines. The guy damn near beat her to fucking death and no one said shit, no one moved, their eyes averted as if they thought that by looking away, the whole tableau would just disappear . . . fucking disgusted the shit out of me. And before anyone says a fucking word, I DID do something . . . I maced his ass in the middle of the candy display. And everyone looked at ME like I was the one who started all the shit - looking very uncomfortable, very indignant.

Fucking cattle. >: ( Definitely true. I can see people in a grocery store (or other place where there are kids) simply giving him dirty looks and moving away. MAYBE uttering an expletive or two, but not much more...

Yeah, same here. And honestly, I'd have it no other way. Kids learn enough st00pid shit (starting fights, screaming, etc) without more lessons.
